PARIS, July 17.—French aid for the impoverished Reich—to the tune of $150,000,000 or $200,000,000—is now being considered by the government of Premier Pierre Laval, with the likelihood that definite decision will be reached shortly to pour this huge sum into the gaping coffers of Germany, International News Service learned from a reliable source today.

See Speedy Solution

Heralding a speedy solution of the dire financial crisis in Germany that has had serious repercussions throughout the world, the Quai D'Orsay is gradually retreating from its harsh demands for political concessions in exchange for the loan. Before many days have passed, the European atmosphere is expected to be cleared of the threat of bankruptcy and chaos which has overhung Germany and Central Europe.

Revelation of France's more conciliatory attitude came a short while before Chancellor Heinrich Bruening and Foreign Minister Dr. Julius Curtius of Germany were due to arrive in Paris for a conference with

BOMB EXPLODES WITHIN WALLS OF VATICAN GARDEN

(BULLETIN)
(International News Service)

VATICAN CITY, July 17.—A bomb explosion within the walls of the garden of the Vatican today awoke Pope Pius and startled the Swiss guards charged with his safety.

The bomb, which did no damage, was discovered late last night beneath a pew in St. Peter's, the first church of Catholicism, wrapped in a newspaper. It was taken to the police barracks of Vatican City, where it was decided to place it in a secluded part of the garden until morning.

At 1:30 a. m. a terrific explosion aroused inhabitants of the papal city. His Holiness was among those whose sleep was disturbed. When informed of the bomb, he immediately knelt in prayer.

Premier Mussolini, who had arisen early to attend the Italian air derby starting at four o'clock, was infuriated when informed of the explosion and ordered an immediate investigation.

If the bomb had not been discovered when it was it probably would have wrecked the famous church toward which the eyes of Catholics throughout the world turn for inspiration.

Petitions For Controller Are Being Signed

Move To Secure Controller To Replace Auditor Plan Progresses

BELIEVE CHANGE CAN BE ARRANGED

Election Of County Controller Will Likely Occur During Fall

With petitions circulated in various parts of the county, the work of securing signatures asking for a county controller for Lawrence County instead of the county auditor system got under way today. Citizens handling the petitions report an enthusiastic response to the idea and no difficulty is anticipated in securing the required 4,000 names. It is anticipated that the final list of petitioners will see more than 5,000 on it.

The first step towards getting the petition started was the securing of the signatures of the county commissioners, county treasurer, clerk of courts, and coroner. Every officer named signed the petition. In the case of the county commissioners it is only necessary to get a majority of the board, but the petition contains the names of all three of the commissioners.

Providing the court orders the carrying out of the wishes of the petitioners, a county controller will be elected in the November election, and party nominations would be made in the September primary.

KITTANNING, Pa., July 17.—Alphonse Akstin, 28, of 310 Harrison street, East Vandergrift, was shot and killed today by Ford Shankle, gasoline station operator at Cowansville, six miles north of here, when Akstin and a companion, police said, broke into the gas station in an attempted robbery.

Akstin's companion escaped.

Shankle, lying in hiding in the station after a robbery two weeks ago, told police that about 2 o'clock this morning two men broke a window and made an attempt to open the door of the establishment. He said he fired one shot which felled Akstin and then rushed outside and sent a volley of six shots at the fleeing companion.

Akstin, one bullet through his head, was taken to the Kittanning hospital where he died two hours laetr. A brother, Daniel Akstin, 25, identified the body. He was unable to give police any information as to who had been his brother's accomplice.

Shankle was not arrested. County Detective Charles Best began an immediate investigation of the death.

According to police, Shankle heard the men on the outside of the building about 2 a. m. When they came through the window he asked them "what do you want?" Police quoted him as saying that when they made no response to his question but attempted to unfasten the lock on the door, the station operator opened fire.

Rote Is Robbed By Bandit Pair

South Mercer Street Store Proprietor Held Up About Midnight

John Rote, proprietor of a confectionary store, 18 South Mercer street, was the victim last midnight of two holdup men, who used his necktie and some string to render him helpless until they had made good their escape, after taking $50 in cash, which was secured in the cash register and from his pocket.

About 11:30 o'clock, two men about thiry years of age and Americans, entering the store, asked for a drink. As he was preparing the drinks, one pulled an automatic gun, and ordered Rote to back up.

Under orders of the holdup men, Rote was compelled to lay down on the floor. His ankles were tied with string, while his hands were tied with his necktie.

Rote rendered helpless for the time, the holdup men cleaned out the cash register and the pockets of Rote, securing $17 in paper money and the balance of fifty dollars in change. While the robbery was going on, Rote tried to argue them out of taking the money. One of the men remarked that he was sorry, but that his wife was sick in the hospital and he needed the money.

Officers Samuels, Letera, McMullen and Greer answered the call of Rote for assistance received about midnight. Rote described the men as Americans, about 30 years of age, 145 pounds in weight, approximately five feet seven inches in height, smooth faced, medium light hair and wearing light colored clothing.

HUSBAND AND BABY ESCAPE WITH CUTS

Mrs. James C. McGoun, 212 East Moody avenue, is resting today in the Jameson Memorial hospital from a badly fractured kneecap and painful lacerations and bruises, as a result of a crash of the car driven by her husband and that operated by a Kalamazoo, Mich., resident, at one of Butler's main street intersections about 9 o'clock last night.

An ambulance brought Mrs. McGoun to the hospital here after first aid treatment had been administered following the crash.

Baby Slightly Hurt

The three-months-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. McGoun, Jane Louise, seated between her parents in the car, suffered a painful eye cut and minor bruises. Mr. McGoun sustained bruised nose as the cars collided.

At the McGoun home here it was said that both cars were proceeding in the same direction on Main street, Butler, when as the Polk street corner was suddenly reached, the other car, driven by Stark Weather, of Kalamazoo, swerved around directly in the path of the oncoming machine. Frank Merriwell, Hero To Boys Of '90, Returns In New Adventure Strip

"Burt L. Standish," top, and Jack Wilhelm.

By Central Press

Frank Merriwell is coming back!

This colorful hero of juvenile fiction, known to younger generations since the early nineties, is to make his debut as the leading character of an adventure strip starting Monday in The News.

Gilbert Patten, who created Frank Merriwell and wrote more than 900 of the original stories that bore the pen name "Burt L. Standish," is revising and modernizing the Merriwell series and adding new adventures in which the boys of two generations ago, as well as the rising crop, will take delight. Jack Wilhelm, well-known strip artist, is to make the drawings.

Stirs Memories

To the boy readers of the nineties the announcement that Frank Merriwell is to be a regular daily newspaper feature will stir fond memories. The little candy and cigar stores of their youth, distributing centers of the Merriwell stories, had longer lines of small boys with nickels in their hands every Friday than any circus could ever boast. Friday was publication day then, and week after week, year after year, with clocklike regularity, the trials and con-

BUDAPEST, July 17. — Budapest, the jewel of the Danube, forgot her political and economic woes today in joy over the magnificent flight of the brave Hungarian soldiers, Captains Alexander Magyar and George Endres, from Harbor Grace, N. F., to Bickse, twenty miles from Budapest.

Their Fokker plane, the Justice For Hungary, so named to call the attention of the world to the charge that the treaty of Trianon deprived Hungary of two thirds of her population, glided down to a rough landing in a cornfield outside Bickse at 7:25 p. m. last night (2:25 p. m. in New York.) They had left Harbor Grace 26 hours, 7 minutes previously.

Gas Runs Out

The flyers were forced to land because of a depleted gasoline supply. They came down in the cornfield to prevent injury to farmers gathered in a cleared space nearby.

In making the announcement, the president said:

"As has already been announced, Secretary Stimson will attend the conference in London which has been called by the British government for Monday to consider the present emergency problems in central Europe. I have asked Secretary Mellon, if consistent with his plans, to attend in order that we may have the benefit of his advice as well.

Garden Club Aids Canning Project Here

Will Assist In Work Of Gathering Jars And Glasses For Unemployed

NEXT TUESDAY IS COLLECTION DAY

Further impetus was given the canning project proposed for the unemployed of the city, who are now beginning to gather the crops from the gardens provided by the committee from the local charitable organizations, was given Thursday when the officers of the Garden Club made plans to assist in the matter.

They have set aside Tuesday, July 21, as donation day, when all residents of the city are asked to bring whatever jars and jelly glasses they can spare, to the Red Cross offices on East street.

Arrangements have been made to have several men at the curb, so that those contributing these articles will not have to carry them upstairs, but may drive up to the curb and deposit them.

Urge Response

In addition to making a public appeal for jars and glasses, the members of the Garden Club are calling local citizens by phone, urging them to make contributions to the project.

People who are unable to bring the cans to the Red Cross offices themselves, may have them called for, if they will call 5084.

The project is one of the most worthwhile ones ever entered into by citizens here, as it will enable those who are in unfortunate circumstances to aid themselves in laying aside a food supply for the winter.

The gardens of the unemployed are in wonderful condition and are producing a bountiful supply of various kinds of vegetables. Unless the surplus is canned within the next few weeks, the project will fail in its objective, and an urgent appeal for assistance by the citizens of the city is made by the Garden Club.

Showers Will End Heat Wave

Weather Forecaster Says Relief Is Near In Torrid Spell

(International News Service)

Predictions of scattered showers brought word of cheer today to many parts of a heat-stricken nation that has suffered for four days under a blistering hot sun.

Thirty-two deaths caused by heat prostration and drownings were reported during the past 24 hours in the Middle West and East. Hundreds of heat prostrations, however, were expected to swell the toll.

Temperatures in the Middle West generally hung about the 100 degree mark, and a hot, searing wind from the Nebraska praries made the heat more oppressive.

Weather forecasters at Chicago predicted that cooling showers would come tonight or tomorrow to bring relief to many sections of the upper plains states.

Scattered storms in Ohio brought a degree of relief to parts of that state where eight persons have died since yesterday due to the heat, drownings and lightning.

While the rest of the country was baking the Pacific coast area was enjoying fair weather. Arizona temperatures soared however, the mercury reaching 106 at Phoenix and 102 at Tucson.

Back in the days when the spring was here and now and then we had frost, the pessimists sighed with a lusty squeak, and bellowed "the fruit is lost. The peaches are frozen to chilly balls, and the cherries are all on the bum, and never a berry will we put up, nor an apple or pear or plum. And we thought perhaps that they might be right, but they weren't as you must agree, for the fruit crops is heavy on every farm and the load is breaking the trees. Which only proves as it has before, that pessimists get that way, and shoot remarks without any cause, it's hot, ninety three today.

HUSBAND AND BABY ESCAPE WITH CUTS

Mrs. James C. McGoun, 212 East Moody avenue, is resting today in the Jameson Memorial hospital from a badly fractured kneecap and painful lacerations and bruises, as a result of a crash of the car driven by her husband and that operated by a Kalamazoo, Mich., resident, at one of Butler's main street intersections about 9 o'clock last night.

An ambulance brought Mrs. McGoun to the hospital here after first aid treatment had been administered following the crash.

Baby Slightly Hurt

The three-months-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. McGoun, Jane Louise, seated between her parents in the car, suffered a painful eye cut and minor bruises. Mr. McGoun sustained bruised nose as the cars collided.

At the McGoun home here it was said that both cars were proceeding in the same direction on Main street, Butler, when as the Polk street corner was suddenly reached, the other car, driven by Stark Weather, of Kalamazoo, swerved around directly in the path of the oncoming machine. The crash occurred before the McGoun car could be stopped.

Occupants of the Weather sedan were badly cut and bruised and their machine considerably damaged. The McGoun roadster was also damaged.

Capture Pair In Pottery Store

Colored Youths Are Apprehended By Police—Admit Robbery, Police Say

Theodore "Hanson" Owens, 19, and Clinton Payne, 16, colored, arrested shortly before two o'clock this morning in the Shenango Pottery store, Glass street, by Officers M. J. Young, Augostine and Samuels, pleaded guilty to breaking and entering and larceny this morning before Alderman O. H. P. Green and were held for the September term of court. In default of $1,000 bail each, they were remanded to the county jail.

Call was received from the vicinity of the store about 1:40 a. m. to the effect that there was an indication of attempted robbery at the store, where robberies have been frequent of late.

The officers responded and found entrance had been effected by forcing a window of the store. They saw one person in the store. Entering they found Owens hiding under a counter. Finally Payne was found hiding under some burlap bags.

One bag filled with a twenty-five pound sack of sugar and a sack of flour was found just outside ready to be carried away. Another sack was found filled with a slab of bacon, potatoes, ten cartons of cigarets and other articles.

The young men arrested would admit only to the theft of last night.

Major Arthur Foster leaves Saturday morning for Fort Meade, Md., where he will undergo a two weeks tour of duty with a Service Unit.

Frank Merriwell, Hero To Boys Of '90, Returns In New Adventure Strip

"Burt L. Standish," top, and Jack Wilhelm.

By Central Press

Frank Merriwell is coming back!

This colorful hero of juvenile fiction, known to younger generations since the early nineties, is to make his debut as the leading character of an adventure strip starting Monday in The News.

Gilbert Patten, who created Frank Merriwell and wrote more than 900 of the original stories that bore the pen name "Burt L. Standish," is revising and modernizing the Merriwell series and adding new adventures in which the boys of two generations ago, as well as the rising crop, will take delight. Jack Wilhelm, well-known strip artist, is to make the drawings.

Stirs Memories

To the boy readers of the nineties the announcement that Frank Merriwell is to be a regular daily newspaper feature will stir fond memories. The little candy and cigar stores of their youth, distributing centers of the Merriwell stories, had longer lines of small boys with nickels in their hands every Friday than any circus could ever boast. Friday was publication day then, and week after week, year after year, with clocklike regularity, the trials and con-

Wisconsin's Richest Girl Is Now On Honeymoon, Despite Extortion Plot

(International News Service)

BELOIT, Wis., July 17.—Wisconsin's richest girl, Florence Yates, now Mrs. David Pennistone Scobie, since her wedding Wednesday, was honeymooning in the East today undisturbed by attempts to extort $15,000 from her on the eve of her marriage.

A note signed by the "Big Eight" gang, demanding the money, was received Wednesday by Miss C. Haskin, Miss Yates' elderly chaperon after a threatening note had been received Monday. Rockford, Ill., and Beloit authorities lay in wait all Wednesday night trying to trap the would-be extortionists, but the gangsters failed to appear.

Police of Beloit as well as the family tried to keep the incident a secret. The Beloit State Savings Bank where Miss Yates' vast fortune is in trust also joined in this attempt.

Heiress Of $20,000,000

PLANE COMES DOWN ALMOST AT GOAL

Gas Supply Runs Out Just Twenty Miles From City Of Budapest

By GEORGE BALINT
International News Service Staff Correspondent

BUDAPEST, July 17.—Budapest, the jewel of the Danube, forgot her political and economic woes today in joy over the magnificent flight of the brave Hungarian soldiers, Captains Alexander Magyar and George Endres, from Harbor Grace, N. F., to Bickse, twenty miles from Budapest.

Their Fokker plane, the Justice For Hungary, so named to call the attention of the world to the charge that the treaty of Trianon deprived Hungary of two thirds of her population, glided down to a rough landing in a cornfield outside Bickse at 7:25 p. m. last night (2:25 p. m. in New York.) They had left Harbor Grace 26 hours, 7 minutes previously.

Gas Runs Out

The flyers were forced to land because of a depleted gasoline supply. They came down in the cornfield to prevent injury to farmers gathered in a cleared space nearby.

Mellon To Attend London Parley

Will Join Stimson In World Conference On Monday

GERMAN CRISIS TO BE THEME OF SESSION

By PIERCE MILLER
International News Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, July 17.—Avowedly embarked on an adventure in European diplomacy to effect a rapproachment between France and Germany as a step toward political and economic rehabilitation of a weary world, the Hoover administration today was watching every preliminary move being made toward the London conference on Monday at which the heads of state of the powers will be represented.

Mellon To Attend.

Considerable importance was attached to the fact that Secretary of the Treasury Mellon has been asked by the president to attend the London conference with Secretary of State Stimson.

In making the announcement, the president said:

"As has already been announced, Secretary Stimson will attend the conference in London which has been called by the British government for Monday to consider the present emergency problems in central Europe. I have asked Secretary Mellon, if consistent with his plans, to attend in order that we may have the benefit of his advice as well.

"It is our understadning that the conference is limited entirely to questions of the present emergency."

Work Out Preliminaries.

The preliminaries are being worked out at Paris. Yesterday it was a round table discussion Secretary of

Garden Club Aids Canning Project Here

NEXT TUESDAY IS COLLECTION DAY

Further impetus was given the canning project proposed for the unemployed of the city, who are now beginning to gather the crops from the gardens provided by the committee from the local charitable organizations, was given Thursday when the officers of the Garden Club made plans to assist in the matter.

They have set aside Tuesday, July 21, as donation day, when all residents of the city are asked to bring whatever jars and jelly glasses they can spare, to the Red Cross offices on East street.

Arrangements have been made to have several men at the curb, so that those contributing these articles will not have to carry them upstairs, but may drive up to the curb and deposit them.

Urge Response

In addition to making a public appeal for jars and glasses, the members of the Garden Club are calling local citizens by phone, urging them to make contributions to the project.

People who are unable to bring the cans to the Red Cross offices themselves, may have them called for, if they will call 5084.

The project is one of the most worthwhile ones ever entered into by citizens here, as it will enable those who are in unfortunate circumstances to aid themselves in laying aside a food supply for the winter.

The gardens of the unemployed are in wonderful condition and are producing a bountiful supply of various kinds of vegetables. Unless the surplus is canned within the next few weeks, the project will fail in its objective, and an urgent appeal for assistance by the citizens of the city is made by the Garden Club.

Showers Will End Heat Wave

Weather Forecaster Says Relief Is Near In Torrid Spell

(International News Service)

Predictions of scattered showers brought word of cheer today to many parts of a heat-stricken nation that has suffered for four days under a blistering hot sun.

Thirty-two deaths caused by heat prostration and drownings were reported during the past 24 hours in the Middle West and East. Hundreds of heat prostrations, however, were expected to swell the toll.

Temperatures in the Middle West generally hung about the 100 degree mark, and a hot, searing wind from the Nebraska praries made the heat more oppressive.

Weather forecasters at Chicago predicted that cooling showers would come tonight or tomorrow to bring relief to many sections of the upper plains states.

Scattered storms in Ohio brought a degree of relief to parts of that state where eight persons have died since yesterday due to the heat, drownings and lightning.

While the rest of the country was baking the Pacific coast area was enjoying fair weather. Arizona temperatures soared however, the mercury reaching 106 at Phoenix and 102 at Tucson.

Back in the days when the spring was here and now and then we had frost, the pessimists sighed with a lusty squeak, and bellowed. "the fruit is lost. The peaches are frozen to chilly balls, and the cherries are all on the bum, and never a berry will we put up, nor an apple or pear or plum. And we thought perhaps that they might be right, but they weren't as you must agree, for the fruit crops is heavy on every farm and the load is breaking the trees. Which only proves as it has before, that pessimists get that way, and shoot remarks without any cause, it's hot, ninety three today.

Knights St. Vitus Hold Smoker With Pronounced Success

Hundred Young Men Of The Parish Have Most Enjoyable Time Last Night

First of the smokers and social events planned by the recently organized Knights of St. Vitus of St. Vitus Parish was an event of Thursday evening in St. Vitus Hall and was a very pronounced success in every way. Approximately a hundred young men of the parish were in attendance and thoroughly enjoyed the program, which included three boxing bouts, special music, refreshments and other diversions.

The program of the evening got under way with the presentation of motion pictures of the retreat held last year at St. Vincent College, Latrobe. These were presented under the supervision of S. P. Barry of McKeesport, who is chairman of the Retreat Committee for the Holy Name Societies of the Diocese of Pittsburgh. He gave a short address in connection with the pictures explaining what the retreat means to the average man. Quite a number of the members of the Knights of St. Vitus plan to attend.

This was followed by three three round bouts between members of the Arch Cumo stable of this city, with Mr. Cumo acting as referee and Peter P. Capitolo as timekeeper.

These were interesting and the principals were Billy Frengel versus Kid Badger; Joe DiMuccio versus Ollie Pollard and Bill Donell versus Merle Gibson.

Another interesting feature was the commedy skit and singing of Harry Ross and Peter Mele, in which Golf came in for its share of amusing jokes. Ross did some extra fine dancing in connection with the skit.

The speaker of the evening was Rev. Fr. A. P. Scholz pastor, of St. Margaret's church, who complimented the organization on its activities taking his topic "The Spiritual Side of Man." After saying that entertainment was essential in the life of all men, he remarked "There is nothing better than a hundred percent Catholic. An organization such as yours which calls upon its members to be Catholic will never bring disgrace on the church. I would urge you to make this organization not Catholic in name only because its members live up to their religion. I would especially urge you to participate in the Blessed Sacrament and prove your Catholicism. I wish you success in your undertaking."

Adding to the pleasure of the evening were the selections by the band of Ralph Monico and Copple Brothers. Smokes and refreshments were served and thoroughly enjoyed.

At the close E. F. Strizzi, the secretary and member of the social committee urged hte attendance of the members at Communion next Sunday morning and the communion breakfast to be served following communion.

PA NEWC OBSERVES

they were 49 years ago. In looking over old copies of the Daily City News, a forerunner of the New Castle News, of 1882, Pa Newc noted that farmers were receiving 30 cents per pound for their butter that year, eggs sold for 20 cents per dozen and potatoes one dollar per bushel. That is practically the price paid this spring by New Castle housewives for the same commodities.

A ride out into the country right now is well worth any person's time. The wheat harvest is in full swing and great stacks of sheaves are piled in the fields, while hay is also being cut. The fields of corn are beginning to show tassels in many spots and there is a look of plenteousness throughout the rural sections.

Fortunate it is that most of New Castle's unimproved streets have been oiled this year. The hot weather would make the dust a nuisance on every unpaved street, if they were not oiled. Most citizens had the streets oiled in front of their premises, but here and there about the city are seen a few short stretches where the residents failed to meet their obligations in this matter, even though their neighbors did oil the street up to their premises.

Pa Newc is inclined to believe that New Castle's paved streets are being kept cleaner than they were a few years ago. Whether it's the use of the power sweeper, or whether it's some new arrangement we do not know, but we're speaking of the visible results.

Preliminary plans are being considered for a formal ceremony for the breaking of ground for the start of work on the Pymatuning dam construction. A number of celebrities are to be invited to share in the program.

Rains of the past week have been entirely local. Some communities near New Castle report heavy rains during the week. In New Castle a steady rain is needed. Lawns and gardens are showing the need of rain.

Let's see, now. Did it rain or did it not rain on St. Swithin's Day?

If you want to know how many different varieties of flies and insects there are, just try working around an electric light at an open window one of these sultry night. Pa Newc has tried it many nights in The News building and can classify at least a hundred varieties he believes.

Peter Anderson, of 504 Florence avenue, reported into Pa Newc this morning that he has a very fine crop of ripe tomatoes, which is among the first reports of this nature.

FRANK MERRIWELL, HERO TO BOYS OF '90, RETURNS IN STRIP

quests, the hair-breadth escapes, the adventures and loves of Frank Merriwell, appeared on the stands in gaudy brochures. Clean, courageous stuff, too. Frank was a boy such as all worthy parents would wish their sons to become. It is often said that Gilbert Patten, through his Merriwell stories, inspired more boys to go through high school and college than any other writer.

Frank's Adventures

Frank Merriwell's adventures, in strip form, will take him through Fardale academy, over many parts of the United States, into Mexico, South America, Africa, Europe, back home again, through Yale, into railroading after a loss of his fortune, across the continent with his baseball team, and his dramatic company, into mining in the southwest, and finally to the establishment of his famous school at which so-called incorrigible boys are taught throught sympathetic understanding to become fine and manly youngsters.

Frank's popularity as an adventure strip hero is bound to more than equal that of his earlier days. Watch for the beginning of his adventures in The News starting Monday.

BELIEVE FRANCE READY TO LOAN GERMANY FUNDS

Believes $200,000,000 Sufficient

International News Service learned that France believes a loan of from $150,000,000 to $200,000,000 would be sufficient to see Germany out of its difficulties. Germany has been reported asking for credits totalling $500,000,000, but it was pointed out she already has received an extension of the $100,000,000 credit allowed by the Banks of England and France, the Federal Reserve Bank of the United States and the Bank for International Settlement.

This, coupled with the $200,000,000 French credit, would give Germany a large amount of new money to aid her in straightening out her tangled financial situation. If this proved insufficient, it was understood the French government might agree to an additional loan at some later date if requested.

Under Control.

WASHINGTON, July 17.—The German government has the situation under control, American Commercial Attache H. L. Groves at Berlin cabled the commerce department today.

"The entire country is quiet and a more confident, encouraging tone is apparent," he said.

He declared that the German banks were reopened without incident, holding, it is indicated, the situation well in hand.

Some Violence.

BERLIN, July 17.—While the economic situation showed signs of clearing, violence in many cities of Germany today kept the police alert.

Communist rioters and unemployed last night and this morning raided 30 grocery stores in search of food at Gelsenkirchen. The rioters erected barricades in the streets with paving blocks and extinguished lights. They threw stones and fired shots at policemen attempting to disperse them.

In order to prevent bloodshed, the police surrounded the whole quarter in which the rioting started and awaited daylight to round up those taking part in the fighting.

Similar outbreaks were reported from Coblentz and other places.

Launch Plan to Aid.

LONDON, July 17—Definite measures by the former allied nations to pull Germany out of its economic crisis were launched today at a conference of political and financial experts at the British treasury.

With Ambassador Hugh Gibson attending as unofficial observer on behalf of the United States, representatives of Britain, France, Italy, Japan and Germany gathered "to examine details arising from suspension of war debt payments under the Hoover moratorium and its connection with the Young plan."

The discussions were aimed at laying the groundwork for the extraordinary conference of ministers summoned by Prime Minister J. Ramsay MacDonald to meet in London Monday, evening. With Secretary of State Henry L. Stimson ordered by President Hoover to attend on behalf of the United States, Monday's conference will signalize America's first official participation in a conference of European statesmen of such a broad political scope since the signing of the treaty of Versailles.

Among the matters discussed by the experts was a projected international loan of $500,000,000 to Germany to end the grave crisis caused by flight of foreign capital from that nation.

Indications were that France was displaying a more conciliatory attitude and it was believed the French government would signify its willingness for sorely-needed credits.

Chiefly because of the unexpected and all-important official participation of the United States in the conference of ministers, the British press displayed a far more hopeful tone today, although some sections remained apprehensive of the outcome unless speedy measures were decided upon.

"The conference will fail unless rapid practical decisions are taken," declared the London Times.

to the court, the court shall direct that at the next municipal election and quadrennially thereafter the electors of the county shall choose a citizen of the county for the office of controller in place of the county auditors.

This would mean that if the petition were presented within the next two weeks it would be possible to get a decree handed down in time to have the requirements of the law carried out for the September primary.

Would Systematize Expenditures

The election of a county controller in place of the present county auditor system would systematize the expenditures of the county in the same fashion as the city controller does in the city. No funds would be expended without the approval of the controller and where any expenditure seemed to be without authority of law, it would not be paid until a legal decision had been rendered. Under the present system money is expended and there is no check or audit upon it until the following year. In this way it is possible to expend money illegally without any intention of so doing and county officers might be surcharged with money spent in good faith, but contrary to the law.

For a short time there was some doubt as to what the salary of the county controller would be if such an office were established. There seemed to be no provision in the Act of 1929, but this has been straightened out with the receipt of information that Governor Gifford Pinchot signed one of the two county controller bills presented by Senator George T. Weingartner. The bill signed sets the salary of the county controller in sixth classes at $2500.

Other a Duplication

The other bill, which was vetoed, was in reality a duplication of the Act of 1929, or at least tended to create some confusion. The act presented in the session of 1931 provided that all sixth class counties should have a county controller. The Act of 1929 provides a way whereby sixth, seventh or eighth class counties can provide themselves with such an officer and because of the possibility of confusion, Governor Pinchot vetoed the one, but signed the salary bill in order that a specific salary would be provided for such sixth class counties as elected to make the change.

For many years, there has been a general idea among citizens who want efficiency in public office, that Lawrence County needed a county controller. This was no complaint against the personnel of the board of county auditors, but merely against a system which held up an audit of accounts for a year.

The petitions will be circulated until enough names have been secured, following which it will be presented to the court of this county.

One trouble seems to be that too many people are above the law and not above lawlessness.

Starting in Young

Aviation seems to get 'em both young and old. This child, however, probably can lay rightful claim to being the youngest glider enthusiast in the world. He's pictured in the pilot's seat of a glider at Saint Cyr, France, just as big as life and twice as cute. Judging from the position he has taken the youngster knows what it is all about, too.

Educational Work Busies Scouts In Between Programs

Test Passing Proves Popular; Congressman Swick Visitor Thursday

By SCRIBE JOHN STUMP

CAMP JOHN M. PHILLIPS, July 17.—Campers at Scout Camp Phillips are taking this opportunity to pass tests. Tests are being passed daily in second and first class tests and merit badges. Basketry is becoming popular with the boys at camp and many fine pieces have been turned out by the boys. The display shelf in the camp office is decorated with articles made by the campers. The life saving instructions under the leadership of A. Howard are coming along fine. Thus far the holds and carrys have been mastered by the pupils. The tennis courts are in good shape and are constantly in use. Camp championship sets are being started. The miniature golf course has been put in good shape. Many of the boys prefer this to other games offered. Archery is one of the leading sports. A camp championship is being run off. A mushball league has been formed and is being played by stockades.

Bill Pherson refereed a fast game of mushball between the Daniel Boones and the Kit Carsons. The Boones succeeded in piling up a score of 21 to 3 against the Carsons. A basketball game played between members of Boone and Carson stockades was also one-sided in score. Again the Boones came out on top. The game came to a close with the score 28 to 6.

Chosen For Neatness.

Color guards were picked for neatness in dress. They were Howard Swick, Cliff Mathis, Hans Holms and Jim McDonald. These boys received extra points for being thus picked.

A new plan is being tried out in the mess hall. The table having the neatest, cleanest table are awarded with a small silk flag. The table winning this flag three times receive extra dessert. The Lions Club Hut members have won it for three times and will receive their award.

Among the visitors of the day was Congressman J. Howard Swick of Beaver Falls, who payed a visit to his son here in camp.

A game of Phantom Airplane which took up the evening was played. The Thompsons and the Croketts were the city greenhorns. The Carsons and Boones were the loyal campers. The idea is that the greenhorns carry gas to the wrecked aviator. The loyal campers do their best to keep them away. By the time call to quarters was sounded the greenhorns had brought only one can of gas to the aviator. Thus the game belonged to the campers.

The daily hut inspection was won by Hut Champions. Members of this hut are Bob Bilger, Young, Steve Griffiths, John Travers and Frank McClure, leader.

The camp store sells beside the candy and ice cream, etc., leather suitable for use in all kinds of leather working, reed for use in making baskets and mats, and other equipment used in craftsmanship.

WISCONSIN'S RICHEST GIRL IS NOW ON HER HONEYMOON

American Machine Company, makers of woodworking machinery. The parents of Miss Yates are both dead.

She graduated from Beloit College last June at the age of 22. Her husband, David Scoble of Berlin, Wis., began as a $1,500 a year insurance man after graduating from the University of Pennsylvania and is now a young broker in Chicago.

Miss Haskins denied she had received the notes which ordered that $15,000 be left in a package in a wooded section south of here with death as a penalty for refusal, but she did admit having received similar threats against the life of Miss Yates a year ago.

Sheriff William C. Bell, Rockford, Ill., revealed that his deputies and those of Lake County, Wis., laid in wait for the extortionists Wednesday night and that at the request of Beloit police, the Yates estate was guarded.

The destination of the young couple on their honeymoon was not disclosed by Miss Haskins but it was said that steps had been taken to guard them.

BUDAPEST IS GAY AS OCEAN FLIERS RECEIVE WELCOME

Emerging from the plane unhurt but with tears in their eyes that they had failed to reach Budapest, their goal, when it was almost in sight, the flyers were warmly welcomed by the farmers.

Today they reaped the glory of their achievement. Thousands thronged the wide boulevards of Budapest today to hail the flyers as they went from reception to reception. Flags fluttered brilliantly along the famous Corso and the Andrassy boulevard as the airmen rode to the ancient castle of Hungary's kings overlooking the Danube to be received by Admiral Horthy, regent for a king not yet chosen.

Fervent Reception

The reception to Magyar and Endres was fully as fervent as that accorded in America to Lindbergh after his flight to Paris. Hungarians accepted their achievement as symbolic of Hungary's future recovery, as part fulfillment of the legend written on walls all over the country: "I believe in the resurrection of Hungary."

Hungarians today marvelled at the sensational time in which the "Justice For Hungary" had sped across the Atlantic on the first flight of an aeroplane from North America to this country. That time was only surpassed by that of Post and Gatty on the recent round the world flight.

They also expressed surprise at the accuracy of the schedule of the flyers announced before their departure from Harbor Grace. At that city they said they expected to reach Budapest in 26 hours. Had they been able to complete their journey they would have arrived here only a few minutes late.

When the flyers reached Budapest in a plane sent for them yesterday they were welcomed by a cheering throng which included Premier Stephen Bethlen and Emil Szaly, Flint, Mich., American of Hungarian descent who backed the flight.

Magyar told International News Service that they only caught sight of the Atlantic over which they had been flying blindly for hours when their ship was only half an hour from the French coast. Almost all the way across the Atlantic they plunged through murky clouds.

Unpardonable Sin Subject Of Sermon

Large Crowds Are Attracted Nightly To Tent At Greenwood Methodist Church

"The Unpardonable Sin", says Dr. Johnson, the "Kentucky Colonel" evangelist, is an attitude as well as an act and may be committed gradually as well as instantaneously.

A large crowd gathered at the Greenwood camp meeting last evening to hear the sermon on the sin against the Holy Ghost. Dr. Johnson discussed the question in part as follows: "There is a difference between unpardoned sin and the unpardonable sin. There are many unpardoned sins, but only one unpardonable, unforgiveable sin. It is difficult to reconcile the fact of an unpardonable sin with the infinite love of the Heavenly Father, who is tender, compassionate and all-merciful in his wise and providential dealings with mankind. But the Bible plainly declares that there is an unpardonable sin, described as the sin against the Holy Ghost, which has never forgiveness in this world or in the world to come (Matt. 12:31). I believe this fearful sin is an attitude of willful and continuous rejection of offered mercy. The sinner goes on in his sin, constantly refusing to accept Christ till he sins away his day of grace and steps off the deadline of doom and eternal damnation.

"The different steps over the deadline may be distinctly traced as indifference, irreverence, presumption, rebellion, sacrilege and and blasphemy. The unpardonable sin is not only an attitude, but it may culminate in some sudden act of blasphemy such as cursing the Almighty or ascribing the work of the Holy Spirit to Satanic influence. It appears that the Pharisees committed the unpardonable sin by claiming that Christ had a devil and cast out devils by Beezlebub, the prince of devils. The best way to avoid the committing of this sin is to repent while one has the time and opportunity to become a Christian. Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation."

The song service under the efficient leadership of Rev. Harry Maitland is a special feature of the evangelistic campaign.

Rev. S. R. Maitland, pastor, announced three great services on the coming Sabbath. A number will bring their dinner and remain for the afternoon service.

Tonight Dr. Johnson will speak on the unique subject: "Can a Home Be Happy Without Poodle Dogs?"

Local Boys Kill Big Rattlesnake

While James and Leon Williams, son of Neil Williams, were riding along a road between Loleta and Marionville yesterday they espied a snake crossing the road. They got out and shot what proved to be a rattlesnake, 42 inches long which had 10 rattles. They brought it back to New Castle.

ELECTROCUTING FLIES

(International News Service)

NILES, Mich., July 17—Electrocution of flies is the latest in man's war against the household pests. The device is an electrocuting lamp an electric trap. A conical roof shields a transformer. The latter sends 7,500 volts with .001 amphere through parallel wires. When the fly comes between the wires, his damp body produces a fatal shock as the electricity leaps like lightning to the insect's damp body.

During the fourth and fifth centuries it was customary to applaud preachers.

BOMB EXPLODES WITHIN WALLS OF VATICAN GARDEN

cluding Michel Angelo, the cathedral is the largest in the world. It is full of art treasures of priceless value, including the paintings of Michel Angelo in the sistine chapel and the frescoes of Raphael.

The explosion followed the bitter dispute between church and state over the suppression by Premier Mussolini of the Catholic Youth Societies because of alleged interference in internal Italian politics. Many acts of Fascist violence against Catholic churches took place when the dispute began. The trouble was thought to have died down until the recent encyclical of the Pope declaring that Fascism encouraged "a pagan worship of the state" again stirred the Fascists to wrath. This resulted in the denunciation of the encyclical several days ago as full of lies by the directorate of the Fascist party under the chairman of Premier Mussolini.

Today's bombing was believed to be the direct result of the Fascist declaration.

Asks Permission To Use Ground

Harry Long today told council which met in the city building that he owned some land in South Croton avenue where Valentine street projects. He asked permission to use some ground in which the city has an easement for the purpose of installing gasoline pumps. They would be placed on the Neshannock creek bank. A resolution permitting him to be a licensee was ordered drawn off. The resolution will read that when he is requested to vacate he will do so within 90 days.

The Weathers, according to information obtained, have been visiting in Euler for two weeks.

It was said at the McGoun home that an X-ray was to be taken today of Mrs. McGoun's injuries, and that in all probability her condition would confine her to the institution for several months.

MELLON TO ATTEND LONDON PARLEY

State Stimson had with the French statesmen and Arthur Henderson, British foreign minister. Today it is one between the French and German Chancellor Bruening and Foreign Minister Curtius.

Stimson, instructed by the president to attend the London conference on equal terms as to status with the heads of the principal European powers, is expected to take a rest at the week-end before crossing the channel. He has not notified the state department concerning his plans after the meeting between the Germans and the French.

Stimson's principal role at London will be to bring the French and Germans together—to help smooth out differences between the two countries over questions growing out of the treaty of Versailles and the changed economic situation, to the end that no political obstacles will delay further steps necessary to restore Germany's financial position.

Doorknobs Of World Treasures Of Studios

(International News Service)

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., July 17.—Among the thousands of oddities owned by Hollywood film studios is a widely varied assortment of doorknobs. Some are quite "knobby".

They range from the common American bulbous knob to glittering and curiously carved doorpieces. Five hundred varieties have been collected by one studio. The collection represents a tour of the entire world and two years time.

There are knobs from China, Italy, Russia, France, England, Germany, Sweden and other nations. Many of them are priceless and the envy of museums.

Every type of doorknob in use in America is represented. Where it has been impossible to acquire the official door lever of a country a replica has been manufactured. The assortment is valued at several hundred dollars.

These doorknobs are used in nearly every motion picture produced. Films bearing on historic drama require door fixtures of the period represented. It would appear odd if the bedroom door of Louis IV was adorned with a porcelain bulb.

The standard pitching distance between pegs in the game of horseshoes is 40 feet.

Arizona, New Mexico and Oklahoma were admitted to the Union since 1900.

Knights St. Vitus Hold Smoker With Pronounced Success

Hundred Young Men Of The Parish Have Most Enjoyable Time Last Night

First of the smokers and social events planned by the recently organized Knights of St. Vitus of St. Vitus Parish was an event of Thursday evening in St. Vitus Hall and was a very pronounced success in every way. Approximately a hundred young men of the parish were in attendance and thoroughly enjoyed the program, which included three boxing bouts, special music, refreshments and other diversions.

The program of the evening got under way with the presentation of motion pictures of the retreat held last year at St. Vincent College, Latrobe. These were presented under the supervision of S. P. Barry of McKeesport, who is chairman of the Retreat Committee for the Holy Name Societies of the Diocese of Pittsburgh. He gave a short address in connection with the pictures explaining what the retreat means to the average man. Quite a number of the members of the Knights of St. Vitus plan to attend.

This was followed by three three round bouts between members of the Arch Cumo stable of this city, with Mr. Cumo acting as referee and Peter P. Capitolo as timekeeper.

These were interesting and the principals were Billy Frengel versus Kid Badger; Joe DiMuccio versus Ollie Pollard and Bill Donell versus Merle Gibson.

Another interesting feature was the commedy skit and singing of Harry Ross and Peter Mele, in which Golf came in for its share of amusing jokes. Ross did some extra fine dancing in connection with the skit.

The speaker of the evening was Rev. Fr. A. P. Scholz pastor, of St. Margaret's church, who complimented the organization on its activities taking his topic "The Spiritual Side of Man." After saying that entertainment was essential in the life of all men, he remarked "There is nothing better than a hundred percent Catholic. An organization such as yours which calls upon its members to be Catholic will never bring disgrace on the church. I would urge you to make this organization not Catholic in name only because its members live up to their religion. I would especially urge you to participate in the Blessed Sacrament and prove your Catholicism. I wish you success in your undertaking."

Adding to the pleasure of the evening were the selections by the band of Ralph Monico and Copple Brothers. Smokes and refreshments were served and thoroughly enjoyed.

At the close E. F. Strizzi, the secretary and member of the social committee urged hte attendance of the members at Communion next Sunday morning and the communion breakfast to be served following communion.

they were 49 years ago. In looking over old copies of the Daily City News, a forerunner of the New Castle News, of 1882, Pa Newc noted that farmers were receiving 30 cents per pound for their butter that year, eggs sold for 20 cents per dozen and potatoes one dollar per bushel. That is practically the price paid this spring by New Castle housewives for the same commodities.

A ride out into the country right now is well worth any person's time. The wheat harvest is in full swing and great stacks of sheaves are piled in the fields, while hay is also being cut. The fields of corn are beginning to show tassels in many spots and there is a look of plenteousness throughout the rural sections.

Fortunate it is that most of New Castle's unimproved streets have been oiled this year. The hot weather would make the dust a nuisance on every unpaved street, if they were not oiled. Most citizens had the streets oiled in front of their premises, but here and there about the city are seen a few short stretches where the residents failed to meet their obligations in this matter, even though their neighbors did oil the street up to their premises.

Pa Newc is inclined to believe that New Castle's paved streets are being kept cleaner than they were a few years ago. Whether it's the use of the power sweeper, or whether it's some new arrangement we do not know, but we're speaking of the visible results.

Preliminary plans are being considered for a formal ceremony for the breaking of ground for the start of work on the Pymatuning dam construction. A number of celebrities are to be invited to share in the program.

Rains of the past week have been entirely local. Some communities near New Castle report heavy rains during the week. In New Castle a steady rain is needed. Lawns and gardens are showing the need of rain.

Let's see, now. Did it rain or did it not rain on St. Swithin's Day?

If you want to know how many different varieties of flies and insects there are, just try working around an electric light at an open window one of these sultry night. Pa Newc has tried it many nights in The News building and can classify at least a hundred varieties he believes.

Peter Anderson, of 504 Florence avenue, reported into Pa Newc this morning that he has a very fine crop of ripe tomatoes, which is among the first reports of this nature.

FRANK MERRIWELL, HERO TO BOYS OF '90, RETURNS IN STRIP

quests, the hair-breadth escapes, the adventures and loves of Frank Merriwell, appeared on the stands in gaudy brochures, Clean, courageous stuff, too. Frank was a boy such as all worthy parents would wish their sons to become. It is often said that Gilbert Patten, through his Merriwell stories, inspired more boys to go through high school and college than any other writer.

Frank's Adventures

Frank Merriwell's adventures, in strip form, will take him through Fardale academy, over many parts of the United States, into Mexico, South America, Africa, Europe, back home again, through Yale, into railroading after a loss of his fortune, across the continent with his baseball team, and his dramatic company, into mining in the southwest, and finally to the establishment of his famous school at which so-called incorrigible boys are taught throught sympathetic understanding to become fine and manly youngsters.

Frank's popularity as an adventure strip hero is bound to more than equal that of his earlier days. Watch for the beginning of his adventures in The News starting Monday.

BELIEVE FRANCE READY TO LOAN GERMANY FUNDS

Believes $200,000,000 Sufficient

International News Service learned that France believes a loan of from $150,000,000 to $200,000,000 would be sufficient to see Germany out of its difficulties. Germany has been reported asking for credits totalling $500,000,000, but it was pointed out she already has received an extension of the $100,000,000 credit allowed by the Banks of England and France, the Federal Reserve Bank of the United States and the Bank for International Settlement.

This, coupled with the $200,000,000 French credit, would give Germany a large amount of new money to aid her in straightening out her tangled financial situation. If this proved insufficient, it was understood the French government might agree to an additional loan at some later date if requested.

Under Control.

WASHINGTON, July 17.—The German government has the situation under control, American Commercial Attache H. L. Groves at Berlin cabled the commerce department today.

"The entire country is quiet and a more confident, encouraging tone is apparent," he said.

He declared that the German banks were reopened without incident, holding, it is indicated, the siuation well in hand.

Some Violence.

BERLIN, July 17.—While the economic situation showed signs of clearing, violence in many cities of Germany today kept the police alert.

Communist rioters and unemployed last night and this morning raided 30 grocery stores in search of food at Gelsenkirchen. The rioters erected barricades in the streets with paving blocks and extinguished lights. They threw stones and fired shots at policemen attempting to disperse them.

In order to prevent bloodshed, the police surrounded the whole quarter in which the rioting started and awaited daylight to round up those taking part in the fighting.

Similar outbreaks were reported from Coblentz and other places.

Launch Plan to Aid.

LONDON, July 17—Definite measures by the former allied nations to pull Germany out of its economic crisis were launched today at a conference of political and financial experts at the British treasury.

With Ambassador Hugh Gibson attending as unofficial observer on behalf of the United States, representatives of Britain, France, Italy, Japan and Germany gathered "to examine details arising from suspension of war debt payments under the Hoover moratorium and its connection with the Young plan."

The discussions were aimed at laying the groundwork for the extraordinary conference of ministers summoned by Prime Minister J. Ramsay MacDonald to meet in London Monday, evening. With Secretary of State Henry L. Stimson ordered by President Hoover to attend on behalf of the United States, Monday's conference will signalize America's first official participation in a conference of European statesmen of such a broad political scope since the signing of the treaty of Versailles.

Among the matters discussed by the experts was a projected international loan of $500,000,000 to Germany to end the grave crisis caused by flight of foreign capital from that nation.

Indications were that France was displaying a more conciliatory attitude and it was believed the French government would signify its willingness for sorely-needed credits.

Chiefly because of the unexpected and all-important official participation of the United States in the conference of ministers, the British press displayed a far more hopeful tone today, although some sections remained apprehensive of the outcome unless speedy measures were decided upon.

"The conference will fail unless rapid practical decisions are taken," declared the London Times.

to the court, the court shall direct that at the next municipal election and quadrennially thereafter the electors of the county shall choose a citizen of the county for the office of controller in place of the county auditors.

This would mean that if the petition were presented within the next two weeks it would be possible to get a decree handed down in time to have the requirements of the law carried out for the September primary.

Would Systematize Expenditures

The election of a county controller in place of the present county auditor system would systematize the expenditures of the county in the same fashion as the city controller does in the city. No funds would be expended without the approval of the controller and where any expenditure seemed to be without authority of law, it would not be paid until a legal decision had been rendered. Under the present system money is expended and there is no check or audit upon it until the following year. In this way it is possible to expend money illegally without any intention of so doing and county officers might be surcharged with money spent in good faith, but contrary to the law.

For a short time there was some doubt as to what the salary of the county controller would be if such an office were established. There seemed to be no provision in the Act of 1929, but this has been straightened out with the receipt of information that Governor Gifford Pinchot signed one of the two county controller bills presented by Senator George T. Weingartner. The bill signed sets the salary of the county controller in sixth classes at $2500.

Other a Duplication

The other bill, which was vetoed, was in reality a duplication of the Act of 1929, or at least tended to create some confusion. The act presented in the session of 1931 provided that all sixth class counties should have a county controller. The Act of 1929 provides a way whereby sixth, seventh or eighth class counties can provide themselves with such an officer and because of the possibility of confusion, Governor Pinchot vetoed the one, but signed the salary bill in order that a specific salary would be provided for such sixth class counties as elected to make the change.

For many years, there has been a general idea among citizens who want efficiency in public office, that Lawrence County needed a county controller. This was no complaint against the personnel of the board of county auditors, but merely against a system which held up an audit of accounts for a year.

The petitions will be circulated until enough names have been secured, following which it will be presented to the court of this county.

One trouble seems to be that too many people are above the law and not above lawlessness.

Starting in Young

Aviation seems to get 'em both young and old. This child, however, probably can lay rightful claim to being the youngest glider enthusiast in the world. He's pictured in the pilot's seat of a glider at Saint Cyr, France, just as big as life and twice as cute. Judging from the position he has taken the youngster knows what it is all about, too.

Educational Work Busies Scouts In Between Programs

By SCRIBE JOHN STUMP

CAMP JOHN M. PHILLIPS, July 17.—Campers at Scout Camp Phillips are taking this opportunity to pass tests. Tests are being passed daily in second and first class tests and merit badges. Basketry is becoming popular with the boys at camp and many fine pieces have been turned out by the boys. The display shelf in the camp office is decorated with articles made by the campers. The life saving instructions under the leadership of A. Howard are coming along fine. Thus far the holds and carrys have been mastered by the pupils. The tennis courts are in good shape and are constantly in use. Camp championship sets are being started. The miniature golf course has been put in good shape. Many of the boys prefer this to other games offered. Archery is one of the leading sports. A camp championship is being run off. A mushball league has been formed and is being played by stockades.

Bill Pherson refereed a fast game of mushball between the Daniel Boones and the Kit Carsons. The Boones succeeded in piling up a score of 21 to 3 against the Carsons. A basketball game played between members of Boone and Carson stockades was also one-sided in score. Again the Boones came out on top. The game came to a close with the score 28 to 6.

Chosen For Neatness.

Color guards were picked for neatness in dress. They were Howard Swick, Cliff Mathis, Hans Holms and Jim McDonald. These boys received extra points for being thus picked.

A new plan is being tried out in the mess hall. The table having the neatest, cleanest table are awarded with a small silk flag. The table winning this flag three times receive extra dessert. The Lions Club Hut members have won it for three times and will receive their award.

Among the visitors of the day was Congressman J. Howard Swick of Beaver Falls, who payed a visit to his son here in camp.

A game of Phantom Airplane which took up the evening was played. The Thompsons and the Croketts were the city greenhorns. The Carsons and Boones were the loyal campers. The idea is that the greenhorns carry gas to the wrecked aviator. The loyal campers do their best to keep them away. By the time call to quarters was sounded the greenhorns had brought only one can of gas to the aviator. Thus the game belonged to the campers.

The daily hut inspection was won by Hut Champions. Members of this hut are Bob Bilger, Young, Steve Griffiths, John Travers and Frank McClure, leader.

The camp store sells beside the candy and ice cream, etc., leather suitable for use in all kinds of leather working, reed for use in making baskets and mats, and other equipment used in craftsmanship.

WISCONSIN'S RICHEST GIRL IS NOW ON HER HONEYMOON

American Machine Company, makers of woodworking machinery. The parents of Miss Yates are both dead.

She graduated from Beloit College last June at the age of 22. Her husband, David Scobie of Berlin, Wis., began as a $1,500 a year insurance man after graduating from the University of Pennsylvania and is now a young broker in Chicago.

Miss Haskins denied she had received the notes which ordered that $15,000 be left in a package in a wooded section south of here with death as a penalty for refusal, but she did admit having received similar threats against the life of Miss Yates a year ago.

Sheriff William C. Bell, Rockford, Ill., revealed that his deputies and those of Lake County, Wis., laid in wait for the extortionists Wednesday night and that at the request of Beloit police, the Yates estate was guarded.

The destination of the young couple on their honeymoon was not disclosed by Miss Haskins but it was said that steps had been taken to guard them.

BUDAPEST IS GAY AS OCEAN FLIERS RECEIVE WELCOME

the red-winged plane bending its propeller and damaging a landing wheel in doing so.

Emerging from the plane unhurt but with tears in their eyes that they had failed to reach Budapest, their goal, when it was almost in sight, the flyers were warmly welcomed by the farmers.

Today they reaped the glory of their achievement. Thousands thronged the wide boulevards of Budapest today to hail the flyers as they went from reception to reception. Flags fluttered brilliantly along the famous Corso and the Andrassy boulevard as the airmen rode to the ancient castle of Hungary's kings overlooking the Danube to be received by Admiral Horthy, regent for a king not yet chosen.

Fervent Reception

The reception to Magyar and Endres was fully as fervent as that accorded in America to Lindbergh after his flight to Paris. Hungarians accepted their achievement as symbolic of Hungary's future recovery as part fulfillment of the legend written on walls all over the country: "I believe in the resurrenction of Hungary."

Hungarians today marvelled at the sensational time in which the "Justice For Hungary" had sped across the Atlantic on the first flight of an aeroplane from North America to this country. That time was only surpassed by that of Post and Gatty on the recent round the world flight.

They also expressed surprise at the accuracy of the schedule of the flyers announced before their departure from Harbor Grace. At that city they said they expected to reach Budapest in 26 hours. Had they been able to complete their journey they would have arrived here only a few minutes late.

When the flyers reached Budapest in a plane sent for them yesterday they were welcomed by a cheering throng which included Premier Stephen Bethlen and Emil Szaly, Flint, Mich., American of Hungarian descent who backed the flight.

Magyar told International News Service that they only caught sight of the Atlantic over which they had been flying blindly for hours when their ship was only half an hour from the French coast. Almost all the way across the Atlantic they plunged through murky clouds.

Unpardonable Sin Subject Of Sermon

Large Crowds Are Attracted Nightly To Tent At Greenwood Methodist Church

"The Unpardonable Sin", says Dr. Johnson, the "Kentucky Colonel" evangelist, is an atitude as well as an act and may be committed gradually as well as instantaneously.

A large crowd gathered at the Greenwood camp meeting last evening to hear the sermon on the sin against the Holy Ghost. Dr. Johnson discussed the question in part as follows: "There is a difference between unpardoned sin and the unpardonable sin. There are many unpardoned sins, but only one unpardonable, unforgiveable sin. It is difficult to reconcile the fact of an unpardonable sin with the infinite love of the Heavenly Father, who is tender, compassionate and all-merciful in his wise and providential dealings with mankind. But the Bible plainly declares that there is an unpardonable sin, described as the sin against the Holy Ghost, which has never forgiveness in this world or in the world to come (Matt. 12:31). I believe this fearful sin is an attitude of wilful and continuous rejection of offered mercy. The sinner goes on in his sin, constantly refusing to accept Christ till he sins away his day of grace and steps off the deadline of doom and eternal damnation.

"The different steps over the deadline may be distinctly traced as indifference, irreverence, presumption, rebellion, sacrilege and and blasphemy. The unpardonable sin is not only an attitude, but it may culminate in some sudden act of blasphemy such as cursing the Almighty or ascribing the work of the Holy Spirit to Satanic influence. It appears that the Pharisees committed the unpardonable sin by claiming that Christ had a devil and cast out devils by Beezlebub, the prince of devils. The best way to avoid the committing of this sin is to repent while one has the time and opportunity to become a Christian. Now is the accepted time, now is the day of salvation."

The song service under the efficient leadership of Rev. Harry Maitland is a special feature of the evangelistic campaign.

Rev. S. R. Maitland, pastor, announced three great services on the coming Sabbath. A number will bring their dinner and remain for the afternoon service.

Tonight Dr. Johnson will speak on the unique subject: "Can a Home Be Happy Without Poodle Dogs?"

Local Boys Kill Big Rattlesnake

While James and Leon Williams, son of Neil Williams, were riding along a road between Loleta and Marionville yesterday they espied a snake crossing the road. They got out and shot what proved to be a rattlesnake, 42 inches long which had 10 rattles. They brought it back to New Castle.

ELECTROCUTING FLIES
(International News Service)

NILES, Mich., July 17—Electrocution of flies is the latest in man's war against the household pests. The device is an electrocuting lamp an electric trap. A conical roof shields a transformer. The latter sends 7,500 volts with .001 amphere through parallel wires. When the fly comes between the wires, his damp body produces a fatal shock as the electricity leaps like lightning to the insect's damp body.

During the fourth and fifth centuries it was customary to applaud preachers.

BOMB EXPLODES WITHIN WALLS OF VATICAN GARDEN

cluding Michel Angelo, the cathedral is the largest in the world. It is full of art treasures of priceless value, including the paintings of Michel Angelo in the sistine chapel and the frescoes of Raphael.

The explosion followed the bitter dispute between church and state over the suppression by Premier Mussolini of the Catholic Youth Societies because of alleged interference in internal Italian politics. Many acts of Fascist violence against Catholic churches took place when the dispute began. The trouble was thought to have died down until the recent encyclical of the Pope declaring that Fascism encouraged "a pagan worship of the state" again stirred the Fascists to wrath. This resulted in the denunciation of the encyclical several days ago as full of lies by the directorate of the Fascist party under the chairman of Premier Mussolini.

Today's bombing was believed to be the direct result of the Fascist declaration.

MELLON TO ATTEND LONDON PARLEY

State Stimson had with the French statesmen and Arthur Henderson, British foreign minister. Today it is one between the French and German Chancellor Bruening and Foreign Minister Curtius.

Stimson, instructed by the president to attend the London conference on equal terms as to status with the heads of the principal European powers, is expected to take a rest at the week-end before crossing the channel. He has not notified the state department concerning his plans after the meeting between the Germans and the French.

Stimson's principal role at London will be to bring the French and Germans together—to help smooth out differences between the two countries over questions growing out of the treaty of Versailles and the changed economic situation, to the end that no political obstacles will delay further steps necessary to restore Germany's financial position

Doorknobs Of World Treasures Of Studios

(International News Service)

HOLLYWOOD, Cal., July 17. — Among the thousands of oddities owned by Hollywood film studios is a widely varied assortment of doorknobs. Some are quite "knobby".

They range from the common American bulbous knob to glittering and curiously carved doorpieces. Five hundred varieties have been collected by one studio. The collection represents a tour of the entire world and two years time.

There are knobs from China, Italy, Russia, France, England, Germany, Sweden and other nations. Many of them are priceless and the envy of museums.

Every type of doorknob in use in America is represented. Where it has been impossible to acquire the official door lever of a country a replica has been manufactured. The assortment is valued at several hundred dollars.

These doorknobs are used in nearly every motion picture produced. Films bearing on historic drama require door fixtures of the period represented. It would appear odd if the bedroom door of Louis IV was adorned with a porcelain bulb.

The standard pitching distance between pegs in the game of horseshoes is 40 feet.

Arizona, New Mexico and Oklahoma were admitted to the Union since 1900.

FORMER SECRETARY FALL TO PAY THE PENALTY

AT LAST, after fighting eight or nine years to prevent the inevitable, Albert B. Fall, the former Secretary of the Interior, has been ordered to the Penitentiary, to serve a sentence of one year and one day, on the charge of having accepted a bribe in the famous oil-leasing transaction.

Ordinarily he would have gone to one of the Federal penitentiaries in this part of the country; but in view of his bad health there has been an agreement to permit him to serve out his term in the Sante Fe institution. It is said that under the law he will be eligible for a parole in four months, and if a parole is not granted he can be released under the good behavior act in ten months.

There will be some sympathy for Fall because of the fact that he has already been ruined in health and reputation, but the consensus of opinion will be that he should also pay the legal penalty for the offense for which he was convicted. One reason for the feeling in his favor is that the man who was accused of giving him the $100,000 bribe has been acquitted of the charge. But that is one of the technicalities of the law which the ordinary layman is unable to understand. One of the curious phases of the case is that a number of persons in different parts of the country have offered to serve his sentence for him. But, unfortunately for Mr. Fall, we have no provision for sending substitutes to jail. Perhaps if the former secretary had taken his medicine in the beginning, instead of making a long and costly fight against the course of justice, he might now be better off in health and fortune.

Few persons will be disposed to entertain bitterness or vindictiveness against this broken man, but nearly everybody will feel that it is of the utmost importance that wealth and power shall not interfere with the just processes of the law.

WINNING BATTLE ON WHITE PLAGUE

No longer is the "white plague" a plague in the United States. In 20 years the death rate from this dread malady has dropped in the 59 leading cities from 177.4 per 100,000 population to 66.5, and last year the rate for the entire country was the lowest on record.

Only a few years ago the morbid lived in dread of a lingering death from tuberculosis, just as many now fear cancer. In the few years that have since elapsed medical science, public sanitation, higher living standards and public education have accomplished wonders in both a preventive and curative way. There is no longer any excuse for an American to die of tuberculosis.

American cities were once "death traps" because of the prevalence of the "white plague" in congested centers of population. Poverty, impure air, unhealthful working and living conditions, and too little public sanitation gave them a higher tuberculosis death rate than that of the rural sections. Today there are rural regions in which the rate is higher than it is in many large cities.

The campaign against tuberculosis now centers mainly at two points, the negro and foreign populations. Thousands of these people are still living under the conditions that long ago were found to be conducive to infection, and which explain the present high death rate among them.

EDISON ON WORDS

Thomas A. Edison says he cannot get co-operation from certain types of scientists because they use too many eight-dollar words. That is an interesting protest from a man who has demonstrated that he knows something about science himself.

At 84 years of age, Mr. Edison gives expression to the spirit of our age with admirable directness. Throughout all the history of the world, with the exception of the last century, learning delighted in obscuring itself in the mysteries of big words. Evidently the tradition is hard to throw off.

But with increasing effectiveness in our times, scientific thought and investigation seek to be good for the every-day uses of the many. Mr. Edison wants to find more plants to produce rubber and to adapt them to cultivation in our country. He wants this, not merely to be able to write a book about it, but to make is possible for more people to afford good rubbers and raincoats and automobile tires.

This probably will be one of the reasons why millions of people will reverse the memory of Thomas A. Edison long after the names of many professors facile in the use of "eight-dollar words" have been forgotten.

EPIC IN COMMERCE

Another epic in commerce has been written by that new commonplace wrapping material known as cellophane. It has revolutionized distribution, opened up new markets and inspired new manufactures. It would be difficult to place a finger upon another material that has been so far reaching in its effects during the last decade.

France invented or discovered it 15 years ago, but it was left for American genius to perfect and market it. Almost overnight it became a nearly universal wrapping paper. It is a simple product, being only spruce pulp solidified in thin sheets and chemically treated, yet it has opened up new markets for many commodities, improved merchandizing methods and aided in distribution.

It is entering into the manufacture of hats, false teeth and many other commodities, protecting growing fruit and vegetables, making dirigibles gas proof, protecting merchandise from dirt and moisture and enhancing its appeal on the store counter, preserving the moisture and freshness of other articles and opening up new markets by making it possible to ship perishable products longer distances.

Today one can buy fresh sea food in the farthest interior and buy the best cuts of meat untouched by human hands after they were prepared at the packing plant and placed in their individual transparent wrappers.

These are the miracles that make American commerce supreme and prove that American business is not asleep even in time of depression.

We Found an "Oubliette" A Dark Hole, Far Down Do We Improve?

By MARSHALL MASLIN

Down in the darkest level of an old chateau in France, we found an Oubliette.

We saw it only once, and I, for one, have never forgotten it. It was a shuddering glance into the stupidity and cruelty of man at his worst. . . . We were in a war and we'd seen a few things that were rather ghastly, but we'd seen nothing anywhere along the front like that Oubliette in the castle dungeons.

It was a glorious structure, that old chateau. It shone in the sun and crowned a tall, green hill. Its towers rose to heaven and looked down on a deep moat and a draw-bridge and a great courtyard. It was strong and it was peopled with memories.

You could stand in its great hall and imagine a crackling fire in the enormous fireplace, and imagine brave, proud men and sweet ladies and savage wolf-hounds and gallant feasts. You could almost smell the great roasts turning slowly on a spit in the kitchen. You could hear the clatter of horses in the courtyard and the chattering business of living, happy people.

The old chauteau was glamorous—until we found the Oubliette hidden away in the darkest depths. We wanted to see everything and we were exploring. And as we stumbled through the dank dark with candles in our hands, suddenly we drew back before an enormous pit. We crept to the edge and looked down and we saw a strange chamber, with a floor that funneled from the sides to a wide hole in the center. We dropped matches through the opening and before their flames died out they revealed a larger dungeon below.

That was an Oubliette, a "Forgettery," a place in which human beings were sent to be forgotten. They were dropped into that upper cell and left to starve, to hope, to despair, to pray, to grow weaker and weaker and finally to slip, clutching and screaming, closer and closer to that center of the funnel and then to fall through and to break their poor bodies and to die at once if they were lucky, or to die in slow, mad agony—remembered only by those who had loved them, forgotten by the master of the castle, who had sent them there.

And sometimes, when men carelessly or bitterly say that the human race has not improved a bit in 10,000 years, I think of that grisly Oublitte in that handsome chateau of France and I'm not so sure that is true. . . . We do terrible things, we allow unspeakable unjustices, but we are no longer able to drop human beings into an Oubliette and then feast lightheartedly above their dying moans.

GIVE HIM A CHEERY WORD!

Why not a few words of praise for the man working for you when he does something worthy of commendation?

It should not be hard for you to do this.

It means much to the one thus appreciated.

The person who is making honest endeavor to fulfil every requirement of the position he holds, often wonders if his efforts are recognized by the powers that be.

Sice no comments are made he may convince himself that his work is satisfactory but he would like to get a compliment once in a while if deserved.

Some think an adult should not expect recognition for doing plain duty.

To an extent this is true, but the rugged path would seem smoother if a favorable word could be heard now and then.

Even the biggest men—those occupying important positions—thaw out a bit and warm up to praise from those whose opinion they value.

It is natural to desire to do something worthy of favorable comment.

There is too much complaining and too little credit given for what is well done.

The course that most of us have to travel is not an easy one.

There are a lot of hard knocks along the way: they might be softened by those who have the power to do so.

Sentence Sermons

By Rev. Roy L. Smith, D. D.

IT IS WELL TO BE

Patient with fools—we may need to ask for patience some day.
Charitable with sinners—who of us is without sin?
Forgetful of other's weaknesses—none of us are without them.
Sympathetic with trouble—none of us are strangers to it.
Tolerant of ignorance—none of us are far from its borders.
Trustful of God—none of us are really masters of life.
Slow to condemn others—all of us suffer by hasty judgments.

Bible Thought For Today

GOD WILL PROVIDE—Take no thought saying, What shall we eat or What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed? But seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness: and all these things shall be added unto you.—Matthew 6: 31, 33.

The Great Problem of Today Is To Make Money First— And Then To Make It Last.

All of us kid ourselves to keep our self-respect. We adjust our standards of right to fit our own weakness. If we don't care for dancing, then dancing is wicked. If we enjoy it, we can't believe it is harmful. When we are young, all kinds of fun are innocent; but when we get too old and burnedout to do anything but sit and grumble, any kind of frolic is the work of the devil. That disposition to excuse ourselves and see no evil except in the other fellow makes asses of us all. I once knew a preacher who denounced the sex sins of others and considered himself above reproach, yet he made debts with a light heart and left town owing everybody who trusted him. He wasn't a hypocrite. He simply convinced himself that it wasn't wrong for a poorly-paid preacher to buy things and not pay for them. I once knew a doctor who felt outraged when a man with a hang-over asked him for a prescription for whisky. He felt too honorable to prostitute his profession to ease the suffering of a darned boozer or minister to carnal appetites, yet he made whoopee with female patients and used his sly tongue to injure fellow physicians behind their backs, and he actually though himself a man of rigid honor. Perhaps Nature blinds us to our own fault to keep us from losing heart and taking rat poison.

Babcock, World Benefactor, Lauded For Rejecting Riches

Inventor Of Dairy Test Which Has Benefited Industry Declared To Have Shown Scientific Spirit And Deprived Himself Of Millions In Wealth

Having devoted a long lifetime to the service of others, Stephen Moulton Babcock of the University of Wisconsin is supremely honored in death as a great benefactor. His invention of the Babcock test for determining the butterfat in milk which has done so much for the dairy industry might have brought him millions in wealth, it is pointed out, but he gave it to the public. His other work and the honors he received through life are subjects of comment.

"He declined with thanks to become a millionaire," says the MINNEAPOLIS STAR, with the tribute that "like Dr. Michelson, he wanted nothing better than an opportunity to keep working, and, like him also, he was willing to let fame and pelf go by the board in the pursuit of his chosen profession." The PORTLAND OREGON JOURNAL believes he "was amazing to the money mad," and that paper adds: "Science and his love of it were his pride. To him money was only a convenience, not an idol as it is to the millions who rush through the world in desperate pursuit of it." The JOURNAL recalls that "the National County Life Association of America celebrated a recent anniversary of his birth by presenting him with $5,000 in cash and a memorial plaque," and asks: "In how few instances does statesmanship in America equal the service to humanity of Stephen Moulton Babcock? How many American presidents served the country better?"

"Dr. Babcock revolutionized the dairy industry," declares the MADISON WISCONSIN STATE JOURNAL, "and will go into history as one of the world's greatest hunger fighters. It is, of course, as the scientist that the name of Babcock will live through the ages. His laboratory equipment held for him the secrets of the world's greatest romances, and he approached his problems with the same joy that other men explore jungles and fly oceans. As an extremely human and loveable character he long will remain in the hearts of hundreds in Madison and at the University of Wisconsin. A sparkling wit, love of a good joke whether it was by or on himself, a complete disregard for money and the things it could buy, Dr. Babcock was a delightful personality. His delight in his work, his beauty of character, his unselfish love of mankind all were characteristic of a great man."

"Here was a man," remarks the ALLENTOWN CALL, "who, with the opportunity in his hands, absolutely refused to become rich through it. It was not a case of failing to appreciate the value of an idea which has left many inventors poor but it was a desire to help the industry with whose development he had been associated all his life that he declined riches. And Mr. Babcock is not a sole and solitary example of such philanthropy among Americans. The whole field of agricultural development especially is full of such examples. Consider the case of Pennsylvania alone and the development of the famous Pennsylvania 44 wheat which has yielded Pennsylvania farmers many millions of dollars without imposition of tribute for the developers thereof, namely, the men of State College."

"His gift was in the worthiest spirit of the scientific mind—to determine the truth and make it generally available without thought of personal gain," states the JERSEY CITY JOURNAL, while the LOUISVILLE COURIER-JOURNAL offers the appraisal: "His discovery of the butterfat test enriched his own state of Wisconsin, not millions, but billions, considering continuous returns, and did as much for the dairying industry the world around. Having made this contribution by his own knowledge, intellect and skill, there would have been nothing wrong from any point of view in his taking out a patent on the device and growing rich from royalties. But he was a member of the university's agricultural faculty on a professor's competence and his time was the state's. He gave his invention to the farmers. Then he successfully turned his attention to improving dairy stock and finally perfected the process of cheese making, which added many millions more to Wisconsin's income. What bonuses big business could afford to pay if it could produce creators of wealth like Dr. Babcock."

"He proved—though none but the blind need proof of it—that the right kind of men can and will do great work without thinking of the reward," says the GARY POST-TRIBUNE. The SAN ANTONIO EVENING NEWS holds that "like a true scientist, he toiled for humanity," and recognizes that "the University of Wisconsin has helped mitigate the rigors of the hot summers for countless millions;" that "now the heat gods have taken their revenge upon the savant, for physicians attribute his sudden death to the prolonged severe, hot wave, which aggravated a heart malady." The PORT HURON TIMES-HERALD refers to him as "one of the great humanitarians of the age," and the KALAMAZOO GAZETTE thinks "there is hardly anyone anywhere who does not owe this quiet and unassuming servant of humanity a lasting debt of gratitude."

Some of the honors received by Dr. Babcock are described, and an appreciation of his services to the people of the world is given by the APPLETON POST-CRESCENT in the statement: "The people all over the world, in gratitude to this man for his useful unselfishness attempted to show their appreciation. Wisconsin in 1899, conferred on him a medal—'twas all he'd take—in recognition 'of the great value to the people of this state and the whole world in the inventions of Professor Stephen Moulton Babcock and his unselfish dedication of these inventions to the public service.' The French government awarded him a prize. Australia presented him with a marvelous painting, the farmers from distant New Zealand sent him a volume of New Zealand pictures, the cover of which contained the statement that 'the Babcock test is now in universal use in this country and your name has consequently become a household word among the New Zealand dairymen.' Professor Babcock did not stop at one invention but the list of his inventions is long and their merit great."

The World AND THE Mud Puddles

"GIVE ME THEM PAPERS OR—"

The mortgage on the old homestead has been the basic ingredient of many a sad drama of the American rural scene in which the hero arrived in the nick of time to pay off the mortgage, scotch the villian, win the girl. But it remained for a farmer near Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, to pay off a mortgage on his wheat crop in an unusual and summary fashion in the great drama of grain now going on.

According to reports this farmer brought to town a load of wheat, to be told by the three elevators there that credit tickets therefor could be issued only to the bank which held a mortgage on his crop. If the bank wanted the grain so badly, said he, it could have the load. Forthwith the farmer drove to the bank, broke in the window of the manager's office, shovelled the wheat into the room, over desks, chairs, files. The banker is quoted as saying that he was thankful not to have had a mortgage on the man's cows.

THE SWALLOW

Whenever I look at a swallow
I think of my tailor, and say:
"No sign of a chest that is hollow
You ever appear to display.
And your coat isn't slack
As it hangs on your back,
Like mine when I'm dressed up that way.

"Pretty bird, you go darting and wheeling
All day 'neath the blue of the sky
Yet no wrinkles your vest is revealing
And your shirt front is never awry.
And your wife on the wire
As she views your attire
Never bothers to straighten your tie.

"Oh, wonderful aerial sailor,
You were born to the swallow tail dress:
You leave no excuse to your tailor
When your garment is not a success.
But my chest is too flat
For an outfit like that
And my waistline no fitter can guess.

"But this I have learned, little swallow,
That each for his purpose is made.
We're all built for the paths we must follow
And none may the others invade.
The suit which you wear
As you swing through the air
Can't be made out of broadcloth and braid.

FORMER SECRETARY FALL TO PAY THE PENALTY

AT LAST, after fighting eight or nine years to prevent the inevitable, Albert B. Fall, the former Secretary of the Interior, has been ordered to the Penitentiary, to serve a sentence of one year and one day, on the charge of having accepted a bribe in the famous oil-leasing transaction.

Ordinarily he would have gone to one of the Federal penitentiaries in this part of the country; but in view of his bad health there has been an agreement to permit him to serve out his term in the Sante Fe institution. It is said that under the law he will be eligible for a parole in four months, and if a parole is not granted he can be released under the good behavior act in ten months.

There will be some sympathy for Fall because of the fact that he has already been ruined in health and reputation, but the consensus of opinion will be that he should also pay the legal penalty for the offense for which he was convicted. One reason for the feeling in his favor is that the man who was accused of giving him the $100,000 bribe has been acquitted of the charge. But that is one of the technicalities of the law which the ordinary layman is unable to understand. One of the curious phases of the case is that a number of persons in different parts of the country have offered to serve his sentence for him. But, unfortunately for Mr. Fall, we have no provision for sending substitutes to jail. Perhaps if the former secretary had taken his medicine in the beginning, instead of making a long and costly fight against the course of justice, he might now be better off in health and fortune.

Few persons will be disposed to entertain bitterness or vindictiveness against this broken man, but nearly everybody will feel that it is of the utmost importance that wealth and power shall not interfere with the just processes of the law.

WINNING BATTLE ON WHITE PLAGUE

No longer is the "white plague" a plague in the United States. In 20 years the death rate from this dread malady has dropped in the 59 leading cities from 177.4 per 100,000 population to 66.5, and last year the rate for the entire country was the lowest on record.

Only a few years ago the morbid lived in dread of a lingering death from tuberculosis, just as many now fear cancer. In the few years that have since elapsed medical science, public sanitation, higher living standards and public education have accomplished wonders in both a preventive and curative way. There is no longer any excuse for an American to die of tuberculosis.

American cities were once "death traps" because of the prevalence of the "white plague" in congested centers of population. Poverty, impure air, unhealthful working and living conditions, and too little public sanitation gave them a higher tuberculosis death rate than that of the rural sections. Today there are rural regions in which the rate is higher than it is in many large cities.

The campaign against tuberculosis now centers mainly at two points, the negro and foreign populations. Thousands of these people are still living under the conditions that long ago were found to be conducive to infection, and which explain the present high death rate among them.

EDISON ON WORDS

Thomas A. Edison says he cannot get co-operation from certain types of scientists because they use too many eight-dollar words. That is an interesting protest from a man who has demonstrated that he knows something about science himself.

At 84 years of age, Mr. Edison gives expression to the spirit of our age with admirable directness. Throughout all the history of the world, with the exception of the last century, learning delighted in obscuring itself in the mysteries of big words. Evidently the tradition is hard to throw off.

But with increasing effectiveness in our times, scientific thought and investigation seek to be good for the every-day uses of the many. Mr. Edison wants to find more plants to produce rubber and to adapt them to cultivation in our country. He wants this, not merely to be able to write a book about it, but to make is possible for more people to afford good rubbers and raincoats and automobile tires.

This probably will be one of the reasons why millions of people will reverse the memory of Thomas A. Edison long after the names of many professors facile in the use of "eight-dollar words" have been forgotten.

EPIC IN COMMERCE

Another epic in commerce has been written by that new commonplace wrapping material known as cellophane. It has revolutionized distribution, opened up new markets and inspired new manufactures. It would be difficult to place a finger upon another material that has been so far reaching in its effects during the last decade.

France invented or discovered it 15 years ago, but it was left for American genius to perfect and market it. Almost overnight it became a nearly universal wrapping paper. It is a simple product, being only spruce pulp solidified in thin sheets and chemically treated, yet it has opened up new markets for many commodities, improved merchandizing methods and aided in distribution.

It is entering into the manufacture of hats, false teeth and many other commodities, protecting growing fruit and vegetables, making dirigibles gas proof, protecting merchandise from dirt and moisture and enhancing its appeal on the store counter, preserving the moisture and freshness of other articles and opening up new markets by making it possible to ship perishable products longer distances.

Today one can buy fresh sea food in the farthest interior and buy the best cuts of meat untouched by human hands after they were prepared at the packing plant and placed in their individual transparent wrappers.

These are the miracles that make American commerce supreme and prove that American business is not asleep even in time of depression.

We Found an "Oubliette"
A Dark Hole, Far Down
Do We Improve?

By MARSHALL MASLIN

Down in the darkest level of an old chateau in France, we found an Oubliette.

We saw it only once, and I, for one, have never forgotten it. It was a shuddering glance into the stupidity and cruelty of man at his worst. . . . We were in a war and we'd seen a few things that were rather ghastly, but we'd seen nothing anywhere along the front like that Oubliette in the castle dungeons.

It was a glorious structure, that old chateau. It shone in the sun and crowned a tall, green hill. Its towers rose to heaven and looked down on a deep moat and a draw-bridge and a great courtyard. It was strong and it was peopled with memories.

You could stand in its great hall and imagine a crackling fire in the enormous fireplace, and imagine brave, proud men and sweet ladies and savage wolf-hounds and gallant feasts. You could almost smell the great roasts turning slowly on a spit in the kitchen. You could hear the clatter of horses in the courtyard and the chattering business of living, happy people.

The old chateau was glamorous—until we found the Oubliette hidden away in the darkest depths. We wanted to see everything and we were exploring. And as we stumbled through the dank dark with candles in our hands, suddenly we drew back before an enormous pit. We crept to the edge and looked down and we saw a strange chamber, with a floor that funneled from the sides to a wide hole in the center. We dropped matches through the opening and before their flames died out they revealed a larger dungeon below.

That was an Oubliette, a "Forgettery," a place in which human beings were sent to be forgotten. They were dropped into that upper cell and left to starve, to hope, to despair, to pray, to grow weaker and weaker and finally to slip, clutching and screaming, closer and closer to that center of the funnel and then to fall through and to break their poor bodies and to die at once if they were lucky, or to die in slow, mad agony—remembered only by those who had loved them, forgotten by the master of the castle, who had sent them there.

And sometimes, when men carelessly or bitterly say that the human race has not improved a bit in 10,000 years, I think of that grisly Oubliette in that handsome chateau of France and I'm not so sure that is true. . . . We do terrible things, we allow unspeakable unjustices, but we are no longer able to drop human beings into an Oubliette and then feast lightheartedly above their dying moans.

The Great Problem of Today Is To Make Money First— And Then To Make It Last.

All of us kid ourselves to keep our self-respect. We adjust our standards of right to fit our own weakness. If we don't care for dancing, then dancing is wicked. If we enjoy it, we can't believe it is harmful. When we are young, all kinds of fun are innocent; but when we get too old and burnedout to do anything but sit and grumble, any kind of frolic is the work of the devil. That disposition to excuse ourselves and see no evil except in the other fellow makes asses of us all. I once knew a preacher who denounced the sex sins of others and considered himself above reproach, yet he made debts with a light heart and left town owing everybody who trusted him. He wasn't a hypocrite. He simply convinced himself that it wasn't wrong for a poorly-paid preacher to buy things and not pay for them. I once knew a doctor who felt outraged when a man with a hang-over asked him for a prescription for whisky. He felt too honorable to prostitute his profession to ease the suffering of a darned boozer or minister to carnal appetites, yet he made whoopee with female patients and used his sly tongue to injure fellow physicians behind their backs, and he actually though himself a man of rigid honor. His delight in his work, his beauty of character, his unselfish love of mankind all were characteristic of a great man."

"Here was a man," remarks the ALLENTOWN CALL, "who, with the opportunity in his hands, absolutely refused to become rich through it. It was not a case of failing to appreciate the value of an idea which has left many inventors poor but it was a desire to help the industry with whose development he had been associated all his life that he declined riches. And Mr. Babcock is not a sole and solitary example of such philanthropy among Americans. The whole field of agricultural development especially is full of such examples. Consider the case of Pennsylvania alone and the development of the famous Pennsylvania 44 wheat which has yielded Pennsylvania farmers many millions of dollars without imposition of tribute for the developers thereof, namely, the men of State College."

"His gift was in the worthiest spirit of the scientific mind—to determine the truth and make it generally available without thought of personal gain," states the JERSEY CITY JOURNAL, while the LOUISVILLE COURIER-JOURNAL offers the appraisal: "His discovery of the butterfat test enriched his own state of Wisconsin, not millions, but billions, considering continuous returns, and did as much for the dairying industry the world around. Having made this contribution by his own knowledge, intellect and skill, there would have been nothing wrong from any point of view in his taking out a patent on the device and growing rich from royalties. But he was a member of the university's agricultural faculty on a professor's competence and his time was the state's. He gave his invention to the farmers. Then he successfully turned his attention to improving dairy stock and finally perfected the process of cheese making, which added many millions more to Wisconsin's income. What bonuses big business could afford to pay if it could produce creators of wealth like Dr. Babcock."

"He proved—though none but the blind need proof of it—that the right kind of men can and will do great work without thinking of the reward," says the GARY POST-TRIBUNE. The SAN ANTONIO EVENING NEWS holds that "like a true scientist, he toiled for humanity," and recognizes that "the University of Wisconsin has helped mitigate the rigors of the hot summers for countless millions;" that "now the heat gods have taken their revenge upon the savant, for physicians attribute his sudden death to the prolonged severe, hot wave, which aggravated a heart malady." The PORT HURON TIMES-HERALD refers to him as "one of the great humanitarians of the age," and the KALAMAZOO GAZETTE thinks "there is hardly anyone anywhere who does not owe this quiet and unassuming servant of humanity a lasting debt of gratitude."

Some of the honors received by Dr. Babcock are described, and an appreciation of his services to the people of the world is given by the APPLETON POST-CRESCENT in the statement: "The people all over the world, in gratitude to this man for his useful unselfishness attempted to show their appreciation. Wisconsin in 1909, conferred on him a medal—'twas all he'd take—in recognition 'of the great value to the people of this state and the whole world in the inventions of Professor Stephen Moulton Babcock and his unselfish dedication of these inventions to the public service.' The French government awarded him a prize, Australia presented him with a marvelous painting, the farmers from distant New Zealand sent him a volume of New Zealand pictures, the cover of which contained the statement that 'the Babcock test is now in universal use in this country and your name has consequently become a household word among the New Zealand dairymen.' Professor Babcock did not stop at one invention but the list of his inventions is long and their merit great."

The World AND THE Mud Puddles

"GIVE ME THEM PAPERS OR—"

The mortgage on the old homestead has been the basic ingredient of many a sad drama of the American rural scene in which the hero arrived in the nick of time to pay off the mortgage, scotch the villian, win the girl. But it remained for a farmer near Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, to pay off a mortgage on his wheat crop in an unusual and summary fashion in the great drama of grain now going on.

According to reports this farmer brought to town a load of wheat, to be sold by the three elevators there that credit tickets therefor could be issued only to the bank which held a mortgage on his crop. If the bank wanted the grain so badly, said he, it could have the load. Forthwith the farmer drove to the bank, broke in the window of the manager's office, shovelled the wheat into the room, over desks, chairs, files. The banker is quoted as saying that he was thankful not to have had a mortgage on the man's cows.

THE SWALLOW

Whenever I look at a swallow
I think of my tailor, and say:
"No sign of a chest that is hollow
You ever appear to display.
And your coat isn't slack
As it hangs on your back,
Like mine when I'm dressed up that way.

"Pretty bird, you go darting and wheeling
All day 'neath the blue of the sky
Yet no wrinkles your vest is revealing
And your shirt front is never awry.
And your wife on the wire
As she views your attire
Never bothers to straighten your tie.

"Oh, wonderful aerial sailor,
You were born to the swallow tail dress:
You leave no excuse to your tailor
When your garment is not a success.
But my chest is too flat
For an outfit like that
And my waistline no fitter can guess.

"But this I have learned, little swallow,
That each for his purpose is made.
We're all built for the paths we must follow
And none may the others invade.
The suit which you wear
As you swing through the air
Can't be made out of broadcloth and braid.

CHICAGO, July 17.—Jack Dempsey is dead broke and badly in need of a million dollars which he hopes to get through a desperate ring comeback, the Chicago Evening American said today in a copyright despatch from Reno, Nev.

It was Reno, America's new "Cradle of liberty," which caused the former heavyweight champion's financial downfall, the Evening American story said.

Dempsey needs a million dollars—and needs it badly, it was said, and the only way he can get it is to fight for it.

The most famous of the ex-champions is desperate. It is altogether likely that he will stage a comeback, the despatch said.

Court Refuses New Trials In Robbery Cases

Judge Chambers Hands Down Opinion In Raniolo And Saunders Cases

OPINIONS RENDERED IN OTHER CASES

In opinions handed down by Judge James A. Chambers this morning new trials were refused in the cases of the commonwealth against Samuel G. Raniolo and John Saunders, implicated in the robbery of the Roux store at New Wilmington. A new trial had previously been refused Francis Desmond, who was convicted along with Raniolo and Saunders. Reasons assigned for refusing new trials in the Raniolo and Saunders cases were the same as in the Desmond case, which held that the conviction was warranted by the evidence.

Other Opinions

In the case of J. W. Martin and Sons against John H. Gleghorn, J. A. Weller and H. L. Reed, petition to open judgment, rule granted was made absolute and judgment is opened, with the right of the defendant to file a defense.

In the case of Rufus McKinley against Abe Levine, for more specific statement, rule to show cause why a more specific counterclaim should not be filed is discharged, and the plaintiff is permitted to file a reply.

In the divorce case of Frank Gumienny against Martha Gumienny, based on a desertion charge in which the respondent asked alimony and counsel fees, the court held that in view of the age of libellant, 73, the request for alimony is refused, but the libellant is directed to pay $50 counsel fees, and the decree is withheld until it is paid. This couple was married in 1888 and lived together until 1928.

Salmon Spawn In Volano Craters

Explorers Bring Back Some Strange Tales From Alaskan Wilds

Tales of bears who take beauty baths and salmon who spawn in volcano craters are told by Dr. Bernard R. Hubbard, S. J., head of the geology department at Santa Clara, says the Vancouver Province.

Father Hubbard, accompanied by four atheletes of St. Ignatius and Santa Clara universities, paid a visit to the Alaskan wilds. During the party's explorations they descended into the depths of the world's two largest craters, Anaikchak and Veniaminoff, both of which are active.

"From Anaikchak bay we made the trip up the unchartered Anaikchak river in an outboard dory," Father Hubbard said. "We left the boat 16 miles inland and after a five day trek we reached the volcano's base. Two days later we moved inside the crater through a break in the 2000 foot wall that allows a river to gush forth in a series of rapids.

"The first sight of the crater took our breaths away. Inside the 20-mile circumference rises a majestic mountain the height of Vesuivus, smoking continuously in several places. A lake two miles long, in which salmon spawn, is located in one corner.

"Bear trails lead to soda iron springs at the head of the lake and we found that bears had dug holes in the warm mud to enjoy mud baths."

The trip to Veniaminoff took them through miles of all but impassable virgin wilderness. Once there, they saw one of the least-known volcanoes in the world, its cone ejecting ashes and smoke from a hollow in the surrounding ice.

Reconsider Action On Post Office Site

Councilmen To Discuss Matter As Committee Pending Future Action

Council met today in the city building and the advisability of the city giving the government $40,000, and the present library site for the present site of the post office was referred to committee following Councilman Louis Genkinger's suggestion.

When council convened several citizens appeared in council chambers and James Rocks acted as spokesman. He said that by paying the "bonus" of $40,000 to the government, it would result in an increase of taxes and said that if the present site was sold at public sale it would bring less than the combined price of the library site and the price offered.

Councilman Genkinger said he did not believe the arrangement was consummated as it should be. He said he did not believe the government should be paid a bonus and he offered a motion to have council rescind its offer. Upon a suggestion of Councilman Burns the proposition was sent to committee for the purpose of discussing the advisability of withdrawing the offer.

Order Of Garter Is One Of Oldest

British Royalty Attends Reopening Of Shrine At Windsor Castle

For every knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter there is a banner hanging and a plaque screwed up in St. George's chapel at Windsor Castle. After nine years of restoration, at a cost of more than 1 million dollars (much of it supplied by American Anglophiles) this shrine of British chivalry was reopened recently in the presence of George V and the "Lady of the Garter" (Queen Mary.)

Sir Austen Chamberlain, the only knight of the Garter to win the Nobel peace prize and the only K. G. who is not a peer, sat with the crimson and blue-robed knights who boasted themselves "the oldest order of knighthood in the world.'

As this was not a chapter meeting of the Order of the Garter George V. and the prince of Wales wore ordinary morning dress, instead of gorgeous Garter robes, but the clergy of the order came robed and resplendent each churchman displaying the famed motto, "Honi soit qui mal y pense" (Evil be to him who evil thinks.")

Premier MacDonald, though not a K. G., sat by right of his Prime Ministry, in a stall next to that once occupied by the one-time knight, Wilhelm II of Germany. It was observed that during the 1 million dollar restoration the banner of the "All Highest War Lord" had been removed, but his plaque remains, still tightly screwed in place.

Short and simple, the reopening service was without sermon and consisted chiefly of prayer by the patriarchal Dean Albert Victor Baillie of Windsor for the "sovereign and his companions of the Garter:"—From Time Magazine.

Find Mosquitoes Which Hibernate

A species of mosquitoes exists which according to an article in Good Health magazine, stores up fat in the summer, as do bears and other hibernating animals and consume it while dozing through the winter.

These mosquitoes, which are large with spotted wings, are often referred to as snow mosquitoes. They exist in the higher reaches of the Rocky Mountains in the northern portion of Montana, and hibernate during the winter in sheltered spots According to Good Health they may be seen on the first warm days of spring.

Oxhead "Diary"

Margaret Young, a direct descendant of Brigham Young, is shown holding the oxhead bearing a notation made many years ago by the famous Mormon pioneer while on his pilgrimage across the Western plains. The oxhead, used as a sort of diary, bears the inscription: "Pioneers camped here June 3rd, 1847, making 15 miles today—all well . . . Brigham Young." Miss Young is queen of the Mormon covered wagon days celebration at Ogden, Utah.

Word Percale Of French Origin

The use of the word "percale" as applied to sheeets and pillowcases gces back half a century and there it stops. Search in textile records and dictionaries of the three languages in which the word is known shows no trace of its having been used as a name for a sheeting fabric before a Massachusetts mill adopted it for this purpose.

Thackeray refers to red percale in his Paris Sketch Book as a material for bed canopies. In the novel, "Moths" by Ouida, percale is mentioned as a fashionable fabric used by Worth, fifty years ago, for summer dresses. But for 200 years before that, percale was simply "a sort of fine calico much used for shifts and shirts."

Not even the new Oxford Dictionary commits itself as being certain of the derivation of the word, but supposes that it may have been the name of a town in the Indian provinces from which the French originally imported the product as a blue cotton slave cloth. The definition of "la percale" in Cassel's French Dictionary is sufficiently exact for modern use—"a very fine, white cotton cloth, smooth and closely woven, from which all the little hairs have been removed."

Order Of Garter Is One Of Oldest

British Royalty Attends Reopening Of Shrine At Windsor Castle

For every knight of the Most Noble Order of the Garter there is a banner hanging and a plaque screwed up in St. George's chapel at Windsor Castle. After nine years of restoration, at a cost of more than 1 million dollars (much of it supplied by American Anglophiles) this shrine of British chivalry was reopened recently in the presence of George V and the "Lady of the Garter" (Queen Mary.)

Sir Austen Chamberlain, the only knight of the Garter to win the Nobel peace prize and the only K. G. who is not a peer, sat with the crimson and blue-robed knights who boasted themselves "the oldest order of knighthood in the world."

As this was not a chapter meeting of the Order of the Garter George V, and the prince of Wales wore ordinary morning dress, instead of gorgeous Garter robes, but the clergy of the order came robed and resplendent each churchman displaying the famed motto, "Honi soit qui mal y pense" (Evil be to him who evil thinks.")

Premier MacDonald, though not a K. G., sat by right of his Prime Ministry, in a stall next to that once occupied by the one-time knight, Wilhelm II of Germany. It was observed that during the 1 million dollar restoration the banner of the "All Highest War Lord" had been removed, but his plaque remains, still tightly screwed in place.

Short and simple, the reopening service was without sermon and consisted chiefly of prayer by the patriarchal Dean Albert Victor Baillie of Windsor for the "sovereign and his companions of the Garter."—From Time Magazine.

Find Mosquitoes Which Hibernate

A species of mosquitoes exists which according to an article in Good Health magazine, stores up fat in the summer, as do bears and other hibernating animals and consume it while dozing through the winter.

These mosquitoes, which are large with spotted wings, are often referred to as snow mosquitoes. They exist in the higher reaches of the Rocky Mountains in the northern portion of Montana, and hibernate during the winter in sheltered spots. According to Good Health they may be seen on the first warm days of spring.

Oxhead "Diary"

Margaret Young, a direct descendant of Brigham Young, is shown holding the oxhead bearing a notation made many years ago by the famous Mormon pioneer while on his pilgrimage across the Western plains. The oxhead, used as a sort of diary, bears the inscription: "Pioneers camped here June 3rd, 1847, making 15 miles today—all well . . . Brigham Young." Miss Young is queen of the Mormon covered wagon days celebration at Ogden, Utah.

Word Percale Of French Origin

The use of the word "percale" as applied to sheets and pillowcases goes back half a century and there it stops. Search in textile records and dictionaries of the three languages in which the word is known shows no trace of its having been used as a name for a sheeting fabric before a Massachusetts mill adopted it for this purpose.

Thackeray refers to red percale in his Paris Sketch Book as a material for bed canopies. In the novel, "Moths" by Ouida, percale is mentioned as a fashionable fabric used by Worth, fifty years ago, for summer dresses. But for 200 years before that, percale was simply "a sort of fine calico much used for shifts and shirts."

Not even the new Oxford Dictionary commits itself as being certain of the derivation of the word, but supposes that it may have been the name of a town in the Indian provinces from which the French originally imported the product as a blue cotton slave cloth. The definition of "la percale" in Cassel's French Dictionary is sufficiently exact for modern use—"a very fine, white cotton cloth, smooth and closely woven, from which all the little hairs have been removed."

Sunday services in the Union Baptist church are proving of great interest and comfort is the key note of the meetings as they are being held in the basement of the church instead of the auditorium as the atmosphere is many degrees cooler in this part of the church.

Many Towns Have Very Short Names

At least two towns in the United States are easy to remember, and postal clerks, especially, appreciate their two-letter simplicity. They are Ai in Georgia and Uz in Kentucky.

West Virginia seems to lead in the number of towns with short names, many with but three letters being found. Among these are Van, Gip, Ona, Hur, Oka, Ira, Pax, Sun, Due, Hoy, Rio, Fry, Tad Mud, Sod Man and Dan. Postoffice names include such queer ones as Ink, Igo, Gas, Fob, Cid, Duo Aid, Aud and Ojo.

TOLEDO, O., July 17.—Northern Ohio gang warfare, which has claimed the lives of three hoodlums in the past few weeks, broke out anew with the murders of two men near here today, according to police.

Both victims were believed to have been Clevelanders. Aid of Cleveland police was enlisted in an effort to identify the two victims.

The bodies were found by an 18-year-old boy in a lane about a quarter of a mile from the Michigan-Ohio line. Both had been bound and gagged and shot through the back of the head and neck, police said.

Model Prison On 1570 Acres In Pa.

(International News Service)

COLLEGEVILLE, Pa., July 17.—Rapid strides are being made in the erection of a model state prison at Graterford, near here, in the Perkiomen Valley, on 1570 acres of finest farmland in the section. The new Eastern Penitentiary offers its prospective occupants steam heat and running water in every room, with baseball, basketball, boxing, talkies and radio for amusement. It specializes in fresh country air, pure water, well-cooked and wholesome food.

The new prison is a modern, efficient penal institution which is slowly replacing the oft-condemned gloomy stone pile of Cherry Hill, on Fairmount Hill, Philadelphia. There are 788 white men and 470 negroes in the institution now, and when it is completed in 1935, it will be capable of housing 3200 prisoners, 400 to each of eight cell blocks.

New Trial Is Refused Agent In Realty Deal

Opinion Handed Down By Judge Hildebrand In Case Of O'Brien Against Double

In an opinion handed down by Judge R. L. Hildebrand this morning a new trial is refused in the case of E. J. O'Brien against George G. Double. The case grew out of a real estate transaction in which O'Brien sought to collect a commission on the sale of a farm in Hickory township. The defense claimed that a commission had already been paid to another agent for making the deal and the verdict was in favor of Double. O'Brien based his claim on the fact that he had first made the prospective purchaser acquainted with the farm.

Police Battle Demented Man

Officers Have Lively Contest With Man In Cell Of City Jail

TAKEN TO COUNTY JAIL PADDED CELL

Possessed of a strength ten times that of his own, Stephen Kovach, aged 19, rear 115 East Long avenue, deranged as a result apparently of a breakdown in his nervous system due in part at least to the heat, kept six officers busy and damaged their clothing, as well as causing them some bruises of the body when they attempted to overpower him in his cell at the city jail this morning preparatory to taking him to the padded cell at the county jail for examination as to his mental condition.

His entrance into the city jail in the first place, shortly before the battle took place, was peaceful enough, but apparently after being locked up he became enraged and excited. He had been suffering from his mental condition since returning home from work at the Shenango tin plant last Tuesday afternoon at four o'clock, according to his brothers.

On his arrival home he exhibited an excited and nervous condition, causing his family, especially his three brothers, constant anxiety and requiring force at times. A physician was called and gave him medicine that quieted him part of the time, but he was up all last night, as were his brothers, and this morning about six o'clock he escaped. He was attempting to send a telegram at the Postal office on South Mercer street when his strange actions resulted in Officer Nick Faella being called in and arresting him. He submitted to arrest and went peaceably to the jail.

In there, he became enraged and tore out and broke the water connections and tore off and hurled the toilet seat at the officers trying to get him out to take to the county jail. Detective Young and Officers John Moore and Thomas Lynch finally went into the cell and overpowered him, not without some damage to their persons and clothing. They were assisted by Captain J. Ed. Elder, Officer Ray Richards and Detective William Goldblatt in the final overpowering of Kovach, who had to be rendered helpless with handcuffs on the ankles as well as the wrists. He was finally landed in the county jail in this manner. Petition for a commission was immediately taken out and will act at once.

Delay Decision In Thomas Case

Court Withholds Decision Pending Action On Ouster Move

TRIAL IS ENDED LATE THURSDAY

(International News Service)

YOUNGSTOWN, O., July 17—Decision in the sensational blackmail trial of Ray L. Thomas, county prosecutor, today was withheld by Judge Harry W. Jewell, pending the disposition of ouster proceedings against the defendant scheduled to be heard next Monday.

The trial of the harassed prosecutor came to an end shortly after noon yesterday with the calling of several rebuttal witnesses by the prosecution. Judge Jewell, specially appointed, presided in the case. Monday's procedings will be heard before Judge Jewell assisted by Judges Alfred Mack of Cincinnati, and A. J. Pearson of Cleveland, O.

Disbarment proceedings instituted by Thomas against Judges David G. Jenkins and J. H. C. Lyon and Attorney Andrew M. Henderson charged with accepting favors from the Ohio-Edison company and subsidiaries, will not be heard until the charges against Thomas are disposed of Judge Jewell announced.

Judge George H. Gessner was the final defense witness for Thomas. He told the court that at the first meeting with the judges of the Mahoning county common pleas bench Thomas gave him the impression that he was acting as private attorney for Harry Engle, the deposed traction commissioner, while he "went along" with Engle to gain sufficient evidence to lay the latter's case before a grand jury.

The jurist was also questioned about the selection of the grand jury last January. He said that eight vacancies in the panel were filled by suggestions from himself and the prosecutor's office then represented by County Detective W. J. Harrison.

Mrs. Jennie Forquer led the opening devotionals after which the business session was conducted. It was decided by the board that the program for the county convention in September would be handled by the Central committee.

LEAVES CLOTHES IN POLICE CAR; WATCH IS STOLEN

(International News Service)

PITTSBURGH, July 17—J. J. Loughrey today can testify to the unremitting boldness of some of the lightfingered gentry—one of whom, for instance, who believed that police patrols were not immune from robbers, and proved it.

Loughrey left his clothing in a police patrol yesterday as he helped police dive for the bodies of two persons who were drowned when their machine backed into a reservoir.

After the recovery, Loughrey walked back to the patrol to dress—and to discover the watch he had left in a coat pocket had been stolen.

Artillerymen To Join Mt. Gretna Forces Saturday

Camp Is Also Being Prepared For Aviation Corps Arrival

(International News Service)

CAMP KEMP, MT. GRETNA, Pa., July 17—Ranks of Pennsylvania National Guardsmen in training in field and combat problems here will be swelled over the week-end by arrival of the 213th Coast Artillery regiment which will arrive Saturday for a two-week training period.

The 110th Motor Transport company left the camp today to gather up units of the coast artillery regiment in Easton, Bethlehem, Allentown, Reading, Lancaster and Pottsville and transport men and equipment overland to the camp.

Advance details from the 28th Division Aviation Corps arrived at Middletown to prepare the camp for the main body of the organization, which will also begin its two-week training period Saturday. Major J. Sidney Owens, of Philadelphia, commands the air force.

Riflemen continued their training today under the instruction of marksmen-officers, with advanced firing problems set out for consideration. Troops in the rifle school are expected to fire over the qualification course next week, the high scorers to be sent to the national rifle championship matches at Camp Perry, O., this fall.

Machine gun companies from the 109th and 110th Infantry regiments gave their attention to maintenance of fire superiority over 600 and 100 yard ranges, supported by infantry companies from their regiments.

Guardsmen who went through their paces today thought comfortably of well-stocked company larders, loaded with food drawn from the supply depot yesterday. Supply officers drew from the quartermaster's stores food sufficient to take care of the needs of their companies for the next two weeks. This year, unlike past years, the menus for the men have been laid out for the entire training period, instead of being made up from day to day.

Supply officers today checked 33,300 pounds of coffee, 15,570 pounds of bacon, 87,120 pounds of potatoes, 82,620 pounds of bread and 25,200 pounds of ham already issued. Nearly two hundred tons of ice will be required for refrigeration demands of the camp.

Rentz Camp Boys Experience Rain For First Time

Hot Weather Also Found As Boys Continue With Games, Exercises

By BOB WILKINS
Camp Scribe.

After one of the hottest nights ever witnessed at Rentz "Y" camp this season, the whole "regiment" of boys rose sleepily and went thru a drill in calisthenics. After the "kinks" were shaken out and the last traces of fatigue removed, "Old Glory" was hoisted to its home in the skies 'mid the full morning sun and due respect was given its resurrection by the "salute and attention" given by the boys.

Tent one had charge of the divisional exercises which were begun by the offering of prayers. Following is the program:

Prayers—Don MacNicholas, Walter Rice, Chester Rowe.

Devotional talk, "Courage"—Dick Hoffmeister.

The sweltering sun which beat down upon the camp early in the morning was suddenly changed. Dark clouds soon brought rain and games were held up momentarily. However, showers did not last long and sports were continued with the Zebras losing their first games in mushball and volley ball by scores of 12-7 and 11-6. The Panthers and the Minks both won by big scores and large margins.

"Mud football" was in vogue during the wetter part of the morning between the larger boys with little progress made on either side due to the superfluous water laying about the ground.

Many boys journeyed in during the day to pay respects to Jack Patterson, a victim of an accident late Monday night.

Wednesday night being appointed as visitors' night, many parents and friends were present. At the same time a fast game of baseball took place between the camp All-Stars and Tent Five in answer to a challenge issued by Tent Five. The final score was 5-2 with the All-Stars the victors.

Handsome Mounts Of Denver Police Put On The Auction Block

(International News Service)

DENVER, Col., July 17.—There was a lump in the throat of many a Denver patrolman recently when the horses which they had been riding for years were put on the auction block upon orders from the city administration. The horses were replaced by motorcycles.

For years Denver people have been used to seeing the handsome horses of the mounted force patrolling the downtown section amid the din of motor vehicles and the noise of pedestrian traffic. Many are the persons who have stopped to give "Rusty" or "Tony" a lump of sugar, or pat the neck of "Rex" or "Boots". Now all that is ended and 18 beautiful saddle horses will be seen on the streets no more.

Instead they will graze in open pastures, or follow shady bridle-paths carrying perhaps a lady in a riding habit, instead of a bluff, blue-coated policeman.

Sentiment, seldom in evidence at a horse sale, was paramount as the sleek mounts were led one by one upon the block. When whitehaired Captain George Merritt, for many years the leader of the mounted squad, sat in the saddle on his horse "Dick" as he crossed the auction block at $140, the bidding rose above $100 for the first time.

All of the police officers who have ridden the horses were at the auction. As the horses were placed on the block these men boasted of the qualities of their old friends and companions. It was not part of the program, but a real appreciation for long, faithful service.

When the auction was over, one officer said:

"The horses will live like gentlemen now."

"Boots", a young horse, brought the price of $230. He was bought in a "whisper sale" by a man who would not reveal his identity. "Buddy" was sold to a rancher. He will be used as a mount for a young woman from Chicago.

More than 1,500 people attended the auction, the greatest number to attend a downtown horse sale in many years.

As the sale started, the shiny new motorcycles which will replace the horses were outside the gates of the corral, on duty to keep curious motorists in motion.

UTILITIES' TAX LESS

(International News Service)

HARTFORD, Conn.—Connecticut's state treasury will fail by just $386,628 to get as much taxes from public service corporations this year as it did last. Even so, the state will collect $3,729,527 from 11 groups of utilities. Steam railways showed signs of being hit in the last year, paying a tax on net earnings that is $250,000 less than in the previous year. Bus lines and power companies showed some gains, their total taxes increasing about $23,000 in a year.

An argument originating over fifty cents owed Tom Brown, colored, by John Short, colored and which Brown was attempting to collect, caused considerable excitement in the Beaver and West Washington street district last night, when Brown unable to get the money started chasing Short with a razor. Police authorities state that still other charges may be made against him.

Opinion Handed Down By Judge Hildebrand In Case Of O'Brien Against Double

In an opinion handed down by Judge R. L. Hildebrand this morning a new trial is refused in the case of E. J. O'Brien against George G. Double. Police Battle Demented Man

Officers Have Lively Contest With Man In Cell Of City Jail

TAKEN TO COUNTY JAIL PADDED CELL

Possessed of a strength ten times that of his own, Stephen Kovach, aged 19, rear 115 East Long avenue, deranged as a result apparently of a breakdown in his nervous system due in part at least to the heat, kept six officers busy and damaged their clothing, as well as causing them some bruises of the body when they attempted to overpower him in his cell at the city jail this morning preparatory to taking him to the padded cell at the county jail for examination as to his mental condition.

His entrance into the city jail in the first place, shortly before the battle took place, was peaceful enough, but apparently after being locked up he became enraged and excited. He had been suffering from his mental condition since returning home from work at the Shenango tin plant last Tuesday afternoon at four o'clock, according to his brothers.

On his arrival home he exhibited an excited and nervous condition, causing his family, especially his three brothers, constant anxiety and requiring force at times. A physician was called and gave him medicine that quieted him part of the time, but he was up all last night, as were his brothers, and this morning about six o'clock he escaped. He was attempting to send a telegram at the Postal office on South Mercer street when his strange actions resulted in Officer Nick Faella being called in and arresting him. He submitted to arrest and went peaceably to the jail.

In there, he became enraged and tore out and broke the water connections and tore off and hurled the toilet seat at the officers trying to get him out to take to the county jail. Detective Young and Officers John Moore and Thomas Lynch finally went into the cell and overpowered him, not without some damage to their persons and clothing. They were assisted by Captain J. Ed. Elder, Officer Ray Richards and Detective William Goldblatt in the final overpowering of Kovach, who had to be rendered helpless with handcuffs on the ankles as well as the wrists. He was finally landed in the county jail in this manner. Petition for a commission was immediately taken out and will act at once.

It is true Seroco Master Mixed sells far lower than other house paints. But low price alone could not account for its tremendous popularity with the nation's master painters. It had to be a superlative paint or they would never recommend it above all others to home owners; had to paint out easier, cover more ground than most brands do, and stand up as only a paint that is thoroughly machine mixed can stand up. The most widely advertised house paints on earth are now manufactured in the same manner and from the same ingredients that Sears uses. These competing brands retail at an average of about $3.60 a gallon. Seroco Master Mixed can sell so much lower because it comes to you straight from the maker.

Lawrence County Farms And Farmers

By H. R. McCulloch, County Agent

FIND NEW METHOD BEST FOR CUCUMBER GROWING

Pickles are not the easiest crop to raise in the home garden. There are usually more failures than successful crops. The plants begin to die just about the time the small pickles set or soon afterwards.

Cucumbers to thrive should have a constant supply of moisture, a loose soil in which to grow and readily available fertilizer. Hundreds of home gardeners are following suggestions offered by vegetable specialists for the Pennsylvania State College agricultural extension service at meetings last winter. A check-up in June found those using the system very enthusiastic. The practice is as follows:

Prepare soil in one corner of the garden or along one side of the garden for cucumbers. Make a pen or enclosure of one foot wide boards and place on the prepared soil. The size and shape of the enclosure will depend on local conditions. It may be square or rectangular and any size. For convenience we will think of one 6 by 6 feet or 24 feet around the bed. Fill the enclosure with stable manure. Plant the cucumber seeds on the outside of the enclosure on the four sides. If season is dry, add water to the manure. It will be found that the plants will thrive beyond expectation since it is always moist under the manure, there is plenty of fertility, and the roots will penetrate into the manure. An actual count made on a 5 by 5 foot enclosure was 1500 pickles in one season.

REDUCE LIMING COST BY USING RIGHT KIND

As the season approaches for putting lime on wheat ground, the usual questions regarding the different forms and kinds of lime are being considered.

The "best kind" of lime to use is generally the most economical kind, that is, the kind which gives the most actual lime per dollar spent. To choose wisely among commercial limes, one must consider the analysis and the delivered price. A guaranteed analysis is required to protect the farmer against misrepresentation, but no law can compel him to read and consider it. Hydrated lime and burned lime analyses are usually expressed as calcium oxide and magnesium oxide. These may be added together to get the "total oxide" which is the measure of value. A good hydrated lime should contain 65 to 75 per cent of total oxide, while a good burned or ground burned lime should show 75 to 85 per cent or even higher.

All other forms of lime, such as limestone, air-slaked lime, marl, oyster shells, plant lime, and by-product limes are in the carbonate form. They should show 90 per cent or better total calcium and magnesium carbonate. To reduce carbonate to terms of oxide, multiply by .56: thus 90 per cent carbonate equals 50.4 per cent oxide.

To compare the prices of two forms of lime, one expressed as oxide and one as carbonate, first reduce both to oxide: secondly divide the total oxide percentage into the cost per ton, delivered on the farm. This gives the cost of one per cent of oxide delivered. A few minutes with a pencil will throw a lot of light on comparative costs.

Practically all commercial ground limestone on the market is fine enough to give very prompt and satisfactory results, especially when applied this summer for a clover seeding next spring. When applied in equivalent amounts, that is the same amount of actual oxide, experiments fail to show any consistent superiority of one form of lime over another. By buying limestone in bulk, a material saving in cost can be made with little or no added inconvenience in handling. An excellent deal can often be made with local truckmen to deliver lime or limestone either loose or in sacks from the plant or car right into the field.

SPRAY PEACHES TO CURB BROWN ROT AND SCAB

With more brown rot twig infection present this year than for several years, spraying is recommended to protect peaches from the rot.

Carmen, Champion, Rochester and other varieties which start to ripen before August 15 should be sprayed immediately. Later varieties such as Belle, Elberta and Iron Mountain, should be sprayed approximately four weeks before they start to ripen.

Self-boiled lime-sulphur of 16-16-100 proportions is the form of material used. The fruit and leaves should be covered with a fine mist as large drops of spray will tend to spot the peaches. Using small-holed disc in the spray gun will help to reduce the size of the spray drops.

Spraying any variety of peaches within less than four weeks before the fruit begins to ripen may cause spotting.

CUT BARLEY BEFORE GRAIN IS DEAD RIPE

The best time to cut barley is when there is still a slight green tinge in the straw below the head before the maturity of the plants, is a statement made by E. J. Walter at a series of barley meetings being held in the County this week. Owing to the weakness of the barley straw, the heads have a tendency to turn downward and break off when the crop becomes ripe. If left standing until heads ripen many of these heads will be lost in cutting.

There will always be a few spots here and there which are a little too green, but it is far better to cut at that time than to wait until the greenest spots are ripe. When cut at this stage the shocking and other handling of the bundles is much easier than if the crop is dead ripe before cutting.

POULTRY TOUR BEING HELD

A poultry tour and field day for Lawrence County Poultrymen will be held Wednesday, July 22nd. The group will gather at the home of J. A. Evarts, at Energy on the New Castle-Ellwood City improved road, at 9:30 Eastern Standard time.

Young stock and breeding flock will be seen at this stop. From there the group will move to the farm of R. P. Peebles, near Harlansburg, to observe the practice of rearing chicks in complete confinement.

The third stop will be at the farm of Frank Ferris, near New Wilmington. The group will arrive at the Ferris farm in time to eat a basket lunch. A group of Mercer County Poultrymen will join the Lawrence County delegation at the Ferris farm for the afternoon program. The program for the afternoon will begin at 1 o'clock and will include the following:

1. Inspection of Ferris flocks of chickens and turkeys.
2. Marketing of eggs and poultry—Harry Mason, West Middlesex.
3. Feeding the laying flock—Mrs. J. A. Evarts, New Castle
4. Nutritional Research and its value to the Poultrymen—Dr. Hunter, State College
5. Poultry in Western Pennsylvania, H. H. Kaufman, State College

The program for the day has been arranged so as to give Poultrymen an opportunity to see management methodist as carried out on farms and also to hear discussions of the methods as conducted by Lawrence County Poultrymen, as well as some of the more recent research opinions.

SMALL FRUITS TOUR

The annual tour of the North Western Pennsylvania Small Fruit Improvement Association will be held July 29th. All persons interested in making this trip to the Western New York small fruit section should arrange their plans accordingly. The group will meet at the rear of the Courthouse building in Erie, 8 o'clock, a. m, July 29th.

The first stop will be made at the New York Agricultural Experiment Sub-Station at Freedonia. At this stop an opportunity will be given to look over the experiments conducted by Prof. F. C. Gladwin on grapes and small fruits. Immediately after lunch the group will move to Farnum and visit the farm of Jacob Beuzenberger and Sons. An opportunity will be given here to inspect large acreage of plants of new varieties of berries including Adams, 87, Ontario, Adams 101, Newburg, Dundee and others which are not named at the present time. Sixty acres are set to berries on this farm. Other stops will be at the farm of Frank Litz, E. P. Geiger, H. G. Hibbard at North Collins.

The trip has been planned with the idea of visiting farms where the best of cultural practices are being carried on, both from the standpoint of fruit production and plant production. An unusual opportunity is being extended to the Pennsylvania growers by Prof. Gladwin and Drs. Rankin and Cooley of the New York State Experiment Station in their being present on the trip. The section to be visited is the main concentrated small fruit section in the East.

Further information can be furnished interested parties by calling Agricultural Extension Association.

Mr. John Doe of New Castle reads from a book which he has borrowed from the public library:

"The United States for a time sent representatives to the South in an effort to prevail (turns a page) States will forever secure a guarantee to them . . ." He stops and looks back, "Yes, those are the words, but it doesn't make sense," he says. Then he examines the paging. "Page 558 followed by page 563. Pages 559, 560, 561 and 562 missing. Yes, here are the page stubs. Must report that when I return the books."

So like the good honorable citizen he is, he reports the damage at the library desk. The librarian mourns that the books is one volume of an expensive set and cannot be duplicated without buying a whole new set.

"We are keeping a close check on books returned to the desk to discover damage done by cutting, interlining, or otherwise defacing them," said the librarian.

Individuals, who are in the habit of cutting, bracketing, or otherwise marking their own books sometimes treat a public library book in the same way, forgetting that it is not private but public property. Sometimes students in preparing a notebook cut pictures or articles, whole or in part from books and magazines. Some of the most valuable reference books in the library have been mutilated in this way.

According to a state law any person doing such damage shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction is liable to maximum penalty of one hundred dollars or imprisonment for three months or both. He shall in addition make good the damage.

The Board of Trustees is not disposed to be lenient to offenses of this sort, as they can be committed only surreptitiously and with forethought.

DOVE, CAUGHT 5 POUNDER

IRON MOUNTAIN, Mich.—Today's fish story comes from the lips of William Anderson, Norway high school student. While swimming in the Sturgeon river, Anderson said he saw a large bass in shallow water, dived for it and came up with the fish in his hands. The bass weighed five pounds and made a tasty meal for Anderson and William Hoheisal, professor of anatomy at the University of Illinois, who was camping with him.

Finds Daughter After Long Search

(International News Service)

DENVER, Col., July 17.—A mother and her nine-year-old daughter were recently reunited in Denver after the mother had spent five months trailing the child and her father from New Mexico to New Jersey, from New Jersey to California, from California to Florida, and from Florida to Colorado.

Charles G. Taminosian left his home in Nordensburg, N. M., last December, the mother told Denver police, taking his daughter, Barteer, with him. Mrs. Taminosian was frantic with grief.

A Paterson, N. J., postmark on a letter caused her to go to that city. From there she followed the two to Reno. At Reno the trail pointed west and at Susanville, Cal., she found that she had just missed overtaking the fleeing man and the little girl.

From California she went to Florida and then came to Denver, where a private detective agency succeeded in locating Taminosian, an Armenian shoe repairer.

Delay Decision In Thomas Case

TRIAL IS ENDED LATE THURSDAY

(International News Service)

YOUNGSTOWN, O., July 17—Decision in the sensational blackmail trial of Ray L. Thomas, county prosecutor, today was withheld by Judge Harry W. Jewell, pending the disposition of ouster proceedings against the defendant scheduled to be heard next Monday.

The trial of the harassed prosecutor came to an end shortly after noon yesterday with the calling of several rebuttal witnesses by the prosecution. Judge Jewell, specially appointed, presided in the case. Monday's proceedings will be heard before Judge Jewell assisted by Judges Alfred Mack of Cincinnati, and A. J. Pearson of Cleveland, O.

Disbarment proceedings instituted by Thomas against Judges David G. Jenkins and J. H. C. Lyon and Attorney Andrew M. Henderson charged with accepting favors from the Ohio-Edison company and subsidiaries, will not be heard until the charges against Thomas are disposed of Judge Jewell announced.

Judge George H. Gessner was the final defense witness for Thomas. He told the court that at the first meeting with the judges of the Mahoning county common pleas bench Thomas gave him the impression that he was acting as private attorney for Harry Engle, the deposed traction commissioner, while he "went along" with Engle to gain sufficient evidence to lay the latter's case before a grand jury.

The jurist was also questioned about the selection of the grand jury last January. He said that eight vacancies in the panel were filled by suggestions from himself and the prosecutor's office then represented by County Detective W. J. Harrison.

Fascist Soldier Is Assassinated Along Frontier

ROME, July 17.—A Fascist militiaman patrolling the Jugoslavian frontier was shot dead today by an unidentified Jugoslavian who escaped in the forest, according to news received in Rome.

It was believed today that Premier Mussolini would forward an emphatic protest to Belgrade against the shooting. Since the World war there has been friction between Italians and Jugoslavians and many violent incidents have occurred between Nationals of the two countries.

Dr. Andrew Johnson Addresses Assemblage And Memorial Service Is Held

Members of the executive committee of the Lawrence County W. C. T. U. met in the Y. W. C. A. Thursday afternoon for the regular business session with Miss Margaret S. Walker, county president, in charge.

Mrs. Jennie Forquer led the opening devotionals after which the business session was conducted. It was decided by the board that the program for the county convention in September would be handled by the Central committee.

The organization accepted an invintation from the Woman's club to attend the educational peace caravan meeting, which will be held in the Cathedral Wednesday evening of next week.

Dr. Andrew Johnson, the Kentucky colonel, who is conducting services at Greenwood Methodist church was present at the meeting and gave a most interesting address on "The Need of the Hour". His message was one of stirring power and enthusiastic vim.

An impressive memorial service was held for the beloved Anna Adams Gordon, who for so many years head of the world and national W. C. T. U. Mrs. Margaret S. Walker, Mrs. Mary Balph and Mrs. Helen Wilkins took part in this ceremony.

Mrs. Calvin Smith brought the meeting to a close with prayer.

LEAVES CLOTHES IN POLICE CAR; WATCH IS STOLEN

(International News Service)

PITTSBURGH, July 17—J. J. Loughrey today can testify to the unremitting boldness of some of the lightfingered gentry—one of whom, for instance, who believed that police patrols were not immune from robbers, and proved it.

Loughrey left his clothing in a police patrol yesterday as he helped police dive for the bodies of two persons who were drowned when their machine backed into a reservoir.

After the recovery, Loughrey walked back to the patrol to dress—and to discover the watch he had left in a coat pocket had been stolen.

Artillerymen To Join Mt. Gretna Forces Saturday

Camp Is Also Being Prepared For Aviation Corps Arrival

(International News Service)

CAMP KEMP, MT. GRETNA, Pa., July 17—Ranks of Pennsylvania National Guardsmen in training in field and combat problems here will be swelled over the week-end by arrival of the 213th Coast Artillery regiment which will arrive Saturday for a two-week training period.

The 110th Motor Transport company left the camp today to gather up units of the coast artillery regiment in Easton, Bethlehem, Allentown, Reading, Lancaster and Pottsville and transport men and equipment overland to the camp.

Advance details from the 28th Division Aviation Corps arrived at Middletown to prepare the camp for the main body of the organization, which will also begin its two-week training period Saturday. Major J. Sidney Owens, of Philadelphia, commands the air force.

Riflemen continued their training today under the instruction of marksmen-officers, with advanced firing problems set out for consideration. Troops in the rifle school are expected to fire over the qualification course next week, the high scorers to be sent to the national rifle championship matches at Camp Perry, O., this fall.

Machine gun companies from the 109th and 110th Infantry regiments gave their attention to maintenance of fire superiority over 600 and 100 yard ranges, supported by infantry companies from their regiments.

Guardsmen who went through their paces today thought comfortably of well-stocked company larders, loaded with food drawn from the supply depot yesterday. Supply officers drew from the quartermaster's stores food sufficient to take care of the needs of their companies for the next two weeks. This year, unlike past years, the menus for the men have been laid out for the entire training period, instead of being made up from day to day.

Supply officers today checked 33,300 pounds of coffee, 15,570 pounds of bacon, 87,120 pounds of potatoes, 82,620 pounds of bread and 25,200 pounds of ham already issued. Nearly two hundred tons of ice will be required for refrigeration demands of the camp.

Rentz Camp Boys Experience Rain For First Time

Hot Weather Also Found As Boys Continue With Games, Exercises

By BOB WILKINS
Camp Scribe.

After one of the hottest nights ever witnessed at Rentz "Y" camp this season, the whole "regiment" of boys rose sleepily and went thru a drill in calisthenics. After the "kinks" were shaken out and the last traces of fatigue removed, "Old Glory" was hoisted to its home in the skies 'mid the full morning sun and due respect was given its resurrection by the "salute and attention" given by the boys.

Tent one had charge of the divisional exercises which were begun by the offering of prayers. Following is the program:

Prayers—Don MacNicholas, Walter Rice, Chester Rowe.

Devotional talk, "Courage"—Dick Hoffmeister.

The sweltering sun which beat down upon the camp early in the morning was suddenly changed. Dark clouds soon brought rain and games were held up momentarily. However, showers did not last long and sports were continued with the Zebras losing their first games in mushball and volley ball by scores of 12-7 and 11-6. The Panthers and the Minks both won by big scores and large margins.

"Mud football" was in vogue during the wetter part of the morning between the larger boys with little progress made on either side due to the superfluous water laying about the ground.

Many boys journeyed in during the day to pay respects to Jack Patterson, a victim of an accident late Monday night.

Wednesday night being appointed as visitors' night, many parents and friends were present. At the same time a fast game of baseball took place between the camp All-Stars and Tent Five in answer to a challenge issued by Tent Five. The final score was 5-2 with the All-Stars the victors.

Handsome Mounts Of Denver Police Put On The Auction Block

(International News Service)

DENVER, Col., July 17.—There was a lump in the throat of many a Denver patrolman recently when the horses which they had been riding for years were put on the auction block upon orders from the city administration. The horses were replaced by motorcycles.

For years Denver people have been used to seeing the handsome horses of the mounted force patrolling the downtown section amid the din of motor vehicles and the noise of pedestrian traffic. Many are the persons who have stopped to give "Rusty" or "Tony" a lump of sugar, or pat the neck of "Rex" or "Boots". Now all that is ended and 18 beautiful saddle horses will be seen on the streets no more.

Instead they will graze in open pastures, or follow shady bridlepaths carrying perhaps a lady in a riding habit, instead of a bluff, blue-coated policeman.

Sentiment, seldom in evidence at a horse sale, was paramount as the sleek mounts were led one by one upon the block. When whitehaired Captain George Merritt, for many years the leader of the mounted squad, sat in the saddle on his horse "Dick" as he crossed the auction block at $140, the bidding rose above $100 for the first time.

All of the police officers who have ridden the horses were at the auction. As the horses were placed on the block these men boasted of the qualities of their old friends and companions. It was not part of the program, but a real appreciation for long, faithful service.

When the auction was over, one officer said:

"The horses will live like gentlemen now."

"Boots", a young horse, brought the price of $230. He was bought in a "whisper sale" by a man who would not reveal his identity. "Buddy" was sold to a rancher. He will be used as a mount for a young woman from Chicago.

More than 1,500 people attended the auction, the greatest number to attend a downtown horse sale in many years.

As the sale started, the shiny new motorcycles which will replace the horses were outside the gates of the corral, on duty to keep curious motorists in motion.

UTILITIES' TAX LESS

(International News Service)

HARTFORD, Conn.—Connecticut's state treasury will fail by just $336,628 to get as much taxes from public service corporations this year as it did last. Even so, the state will collect $3,729,527 from 11 groups of utilities. Steam railways showed signs of being hit in the last year, paying a tax on net earnings that is $250,000 less than in the previous year. Bus lines and power companies showed some gains, their total taxes increasing about $23,000 in a year.

Miss Liberty To Have Blinking Crown Of Gems

Distorting Shadows Will Be Removed And Sparkling Crown Added

REST PLATFORMS FOR STAIRWAYS

(International News Service)

NEW YORK, July 17.—Miss Liberty with a double chin? Crow's feet around the eyes of Bartholdi's famous goddess.

So insists the United States army, for all its renown for gallantry.

Just what has been discovered by officers of the second corps area at Governors Island, whose official ward Miss Liberty happens to be, is that when darkness falls and the batteries of floodlights are placed in operating distorting shadows form in the wrong spots, thus imparting an appearance quite unlike that of the lady's comely daytime self.

To correct this condition Major General Hanson E. Ely, commanding the second corps area, has completed arrangements for the installation of a modern system of floodlighting the Statue of Liberty.

An entirely new feature will be the effect of a sparkling crown which is to be added to the after-dark allure of the world-famed lady of New York Harbor by the installation for the first time of lights in the 21 windows of the crown of the statue. A blinker system will create the impression of glittering jewels.

Miss Liberty's incandescent "beauty bath" is not the only improvement contemplated, according to General Ely. At a total cost of more than $30,000, including $14,386 for the new lighting system, a more or less general renovation of the monument is planned. A new elevator will replace the present one running from the ground entrance in the pedestal to the feet of the bronze statue proper.

The outer sides of the granite pedestal upon which the bronze figure stands are to be repaired in several places and probably the accumulated film of harbor smoke and grime removed from their surface. Inside the pedestal, safety treads and handrails on the stairs and other necessary aids to safety and convenience of tourists will be installed.

Work on the great bronze goddess will include welding a number of minor rifts in the figure's metal covering, installation of new windows in the head, and erection of rest platforms on the tortuous spiral stairs circling within the statue from feet to head.

"With 350,000 or more people from all parts of the world visiting the Statue of Liberty each year, the monument is one of the most famous in existence," General Ely declared. "It is fitting that its repair and upkeep be carefully looked after by our government.

"It may be recalled that the late President Grover Cleveland, when he unveiled the statue on October 26, 1886, said:

"'Instead of grasping in her hands the thunderbolt of terror and death, she holds aloft the light which illuminates the way to man's enfranchisement. We shall not forget that Liberty has here made her home, nor shall her chosen altar be neglected.'"

When the new lighting system is placed in operation, probably in the latter part of August, the Statue of Liberty is expected to be visible not only to lower New York City, Brooklyn, Staten Island and parts of New Jersey, but to vessels as far away as Sandy Hook.

Zion Minister To Preach Here

Rev. Carl A. Jones, pastor of the Zion Baptist church will speak both morning and evening at the First Baptist church. Mr. Jones has for several years been president of the Pennsylvania Baptist Young Peoples Union, where his gifts as a speaker have been in demand at gatherings of young people. Rev. Jones is one of the outstanding young ministers of the Baptist faith in this part of the state.

He is a clear thinker, and a faithful and forceful preacher of the gospel. At the recent annual session of the Beaver Baptist Association, Rev. Jones gave one of the strongest messages.

Back to His Boyhood Days

DOGS WANT HOMES BACK

(International News Service)

MUNCIE, Ind., July 17—Following the lack of appropriations Muncie's $17,000 new shelter house for dogs was closed, and the homeless dogs seem to resent it. "They've come back in packs seeking admittance," complained Erskine E. Holt, former superintendent of the institution. "They howl, try to open the door and now are trying to dig their way in." The shelter was donated to the city by Mrs. W. C. Ball in 1930 with the provision that upkeep costs of $1,850 be paid from city funds.

AMERICAN ADS LEAD

(International News Service)

PITTSBURGH, July 17—America's advertising in foreign lands was credited with being the most successful in the world in a technical sense by Allen H. Seed, Jr., an advertising executive in an address here. American advertising was the most successful factor in selling our finished products abroad just before the World War, he said. He urged extensive advertising campaigns as an effective factor in increasing foreign sales and exports.

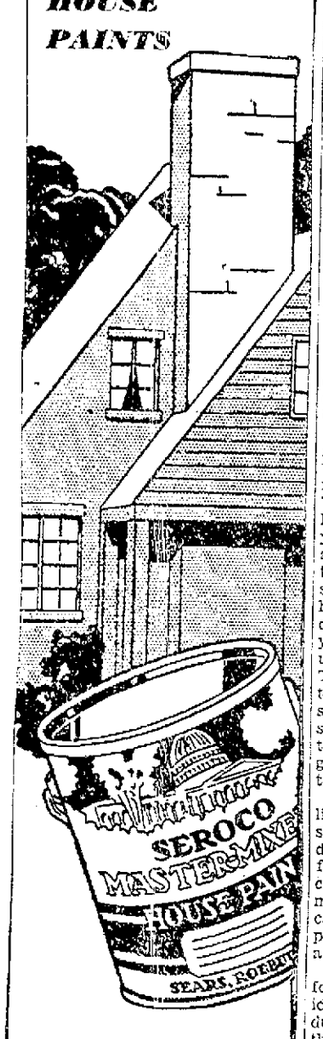
SEROCO
MASTER MIXED

Above All Other HOUSE PAINTS



$2.80

26 Colors, $2.80 Gallon

White, $3.05 Gallon

It is true Seroco Master Mixed sells far lower than other house paints. But low price alone could not account for its tremendous popularity with the nation's master painters. It had to be a superlative paint or they would never recommend it above all others to home owners; had to paint out easier, cover more ground than most brands do, and stand up as only a paint that is thoroughly machine mixed can stand up. The most widely advertised house paints on earth are now manufactured in the same manner and from the same ingredients that Sears uses. These competing brands retail at an average of about $3.60 a gallon. Seroco Master Mixed can sell so much lower because it comes to you straight from the maker.

Lawrence County Farms And Farmers

By H. R. McCulloch, County Agent

FIND NEW METHOD BEST FOR CUCUMBER GROWING

Pickles are not the easiest crop to raise in the home garden. There are usually more failures than successful crops. The plants begin to die just about the time the small pickles set or soon afterwards.

Cucumbers to thrive should have a constant supply of moisture, a loose soil in which to grow and readily available fertilizer. Hundreds of home gardeners are following suggestions offered by vegetable specialists for the Pennsylvania State College agricultural extension service at meetings last winter. A check-up in June found those using the system very enthusiastic. The practice is as follows:

Prepare soil in one corner of the garden or along one side of the garden for cucumbers. Make a pen or enclosure of one foot wide boards and place on the prepared soil. The size and shape of the enclosure will depend on local conditions. It may be square or rectangular and any size. For convenience we will think of one 6 by 6 feet or 24 feet around the bed. Fill the enclosure with stable manure. Plant the cucumber seeds on the outside of the enclosure on the four sides. If season is dry, add water to the manure. It will be found that the plants will thrive beyond expectation since it is always moist under the manure, there is plenty of fertility, and the roots will penetrate into the manure. An actual count made on a 5 by 5 foot enclosure was 1500 pickles in one season.

REDUCE LIMING COST BY USING RIGHT KIND

As the season approaches for putting lime on wheat ground, the usual questions regarding the different forms and kinds of lime are being considered.

The "best kind" of lime to use is generally the most economical kind, that is, the kind which gives the most actual lime per dollar spent. To choose wisely among commercial limes, one must consider the analysis and the delivered price. A guaranteed analysis is required to protect the farmer against misrepresentation, but no law can compel him to read and consider it. Hydrated lime and burned lime analyses are usually expressed as calcium oxide and magnesium oxide. These may be added together to get the "total oxide" which is the measure of value. A good hydrated lime should contain 65 to 75 per cent of total oxide, while a good burned or ground burned lime should show 75 to 85 per cent or even higher.

All other forms of lime, such as limestone, air-slaked lime, marl, oyster shells, plant lime, and by-product limes are in the carbonate form. They should show 90 per cent or better total calcium and magnesium carbonate. To reduce carbonate to terms of oxide, multiply by .56; thus 90 per cent carbonate equals 50.4 per cent oxide.

To compare the prices of two forms of lime, one expressed as oxide and one as carbonate, first reduce both to oxide; secondly divide the total oxide percentage into the cost per ton, delivered on the farm. This gives the cost of one per cent of oxide delivered. A few minutes with a pencil will throw a lot of light on comparative costs.

Practically all commercial ground limestone on the market is fine enough to give very prompt and satisfactory results, especially when applied this summer for a clover seeding next spring. When applied in equivalent amounts, that is the same amount of actual oxide, experiments fail to show any consistent superiority of one form of lime over another. By buying limestone in bulk, a material saving in cost can be made with little or no added inconvenience in handling. An excellent deal can often be made with local truckmen to deliver lime or limestone either loose or in sacks from the plant or car right into the field.

SPRAY PEACHES TO CURB BROWN ROT AND SCAB

With more brown rot twig infection present this year than for several years, spraying is recommended to protect peaches from the rot.

Carmen, Champion, Rochester and other varieties which start to ripen before August 15 should be sprayed immediately. Later varieties such as Belle, Elberta and Iron Mountain, should be sprayed approximately four weeks before they start to ripen.

Self-boiled lime-sulphur of 16-16-100 proportions is the form of material used. The fruit and leaves should be covered with a fine mist as large drops of spray will tend to spot the peaches. Using small-holed disc in the spray gun will help to reduce the size of the spray drops.

Spraying any variety of peaches within less than four weeks before the fruit begins to ripen may cause spotting.

CUT BARLEY BEFORE GRAIN IS DEAD RIPE

The best time to cut barley is when there is still a slight green tinge in the straw below the head before the maturity of the plants, is a statement made by E. J. Walter at a series of barley meetings being held in the County this week. Owing to the weakness of the barley straw, the heads have a tendency to turn downward and break off when the crop becomes ripe. If left standing until heads ripen many of these heads will be lost in cutting.

There will always be a few spots here and there which are a little too green, but it is far better to cut at that time than to wait until the greenest spots are ripe. When cut at this stage the shocking and other handling of the bundles is much easier than if the crop is dead ripe before cutting.

POULTRY TOUR BEING HELD

A poultry tour and field day for Lawrence County Poultrymen will be held Wednesday, July 22nd. The group will gather at the home of J. A. Evarts, at Energy on the New Castle-Ellwood City improved road, at 9:30 Eastern Standard time.

Young stock and breeding flock will be seen at this stop. From there the group will move to the farm of R. P. Peebles, near Harlansburg, to observe the practice of rearing chicks in complete confinement.

The third stop will be at the farm of Frank Ferris, near New Wilmington. The group will arrive at the Ferris farm in time to eat a basket lunch. A group of Mercer County Poultrymen will join the Lawrence County delegation at the Ferris farm for the afternoon program. The program for the afternoon will begin at 1 o'clock and will include the following:

1. Inspection of Ferris flocks of chickens and turkeys.
2. Marketing of eggs and poultry—Harry Mason, West Middlesex.
3. Feeding the laying flock—Mrs. J. A. Evarts, New Castle
4. Nutritional Research and its value to the Poultrymen—Dr. Hunter, State College
5. Poultry in Western Pennsylvania, H. H. Kaufman, State College

The program for the day has been arranged so as to give Poultrymen an opportunity to see management methodist as carried out on farms and also to hear discussions of the methods as conducted by Lawrence County Poultrymen, as well as some of the more recent research opinions.

SMALL FRUITS TOUR

The annual tour of the North Western Pennsylvania Small Fruit Improvement Association will be held July 29th. All persons interested in making this trip to the Western New York small fruit section should arrange their plans accordingly. The group will meet at the rear of the Courthouse building in Erie, 8 o'clock, a. m, July 29th.

The first stop will be made at the New York Agricultural Experiment Sub-Station at Freedonia. At this stop an opportunity will be given to look over the experiments conducted by Prof. F. C. Gladwin on grapes and small fruits. Immediately after lunch the group will move to Farnum and visit the farm of Jacob Beuzenberger and Sons. An opportunity will be given here to inspect large acreage of plants of new varieties of berries including Adams, 87, Ontario, Adams 101, Newburg, Dundee and others which are not named at the present time. Sixty acres are set to berries on this farm. Other stops will be at the farm of Frank Litz, E. P. Geiger, H. G. Hibbard at North Collins.

The trip has been planned with the idea of visiting farms where the best of cultural practices are being carried on, both from the standpoint of fruit production and plant production. An unusual opportunity is being extended to the Pennsylvania growers by Prof. Gladwin and Drs. Rankin and Cooley of the New York State Experiment Station in their being present on the trip. The section to be visited is the main concentrated small fruit section in the East.

Further information can be furnished interested parties by calling Agricultural Extension Association.

NEW LONDON, Conn., July 17.—Just what to do with Old Ironsides when she sails into the harbor here in August is something that is puzzling people here. Library Keeping Close Check On Books Damaged

Mr. John Doe of New Castle reads from a book which he has borrowed from the public library:

"The United States for a time sent representatives to the South in an effort to prevail (turns a page) States will forever secure a guarantee to them . . ." He stops and looks back. "Yes, those are the words, but it doesn't make sense," he says. Then he examines the paging. "Page 558 followed by page 563. Pages 559, 560, 561 and 562 missing. Yes, here are the page stubs. Must report that when I return the books."

So like the good honorable citizen he is, he reports the damage at the library desk. The librarian mourns that the books is one volume of an expensive set and cannot be duplicated without buying a whole new set.

"We are keeping a close check on books returned to the desk to discover damage done by cutting, interlining, or otherwise defacing them," said the librarian.

Individuals, who are in the habit of cutting, bracketing, or otherwise marking their own books sometimes treat a public library book in the same way, forgetting that it is not private but public property. Sometimes students in preparing a notebook cut pictures or articles, whole or in part from books and magazines. Some of the most valuable reference books in the library have been mutilated in this way.

According to a state law any person doing such damage shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction is liable to maximum penalty of one hundred dollars or imprisonment for three months or both. He shall in addition make good the damage.

The Board of Trustees is not disposed to be lenient to offenses of this sort, as they can be committed only surreptitiously and with forethought.

DOVE, CAUGHT 5 POUNDER

IRON MOUNTAIN, Mich.—Today's fish story comes from the lips of William Anderson, Norway high school student. While swimming in the Sturgeon river, Anderson said he saw a large bass in shallow water, dived for it and came up with the fish in his hands. The bass weighed five pounds and made a tasty meal for Anderson and William Hoheisal, professor of anatomy at the University of Illinois, who was camping with him.

Finds Daughter After Long Search

(International News Service)

DENVER, Col., July 17.—A mother and her nine-year-old daughter were recently reunited in Denver after the mother had spent five months trailing the child and her father from New Mexico to New Jersey, from New Jersey to California, from California to Florida, and from Florida to Colorado.

Charles G. Taminosian left his home in Nordensburg, N. M., last December, the mother told Denver police, taking his daughter, Barteer, with him. Mrs. Taminosian was frantic with grief.

A Paterson, N. J., postmark on a letter caused her to go to that city. From there she followed the two to Reno. At Reno the trail pointed west and at Susanville, Cal., she found that she had just missed overtaking the fleeing man and the little girl.

From California she went to Florida and then came to Denver, where a private detective agency succeeded in locating Taminosian, an Armenian shoe repairer.

CROSS-EYED CONFESSIONS

A Surgeon's Stirring Confession

The Mystery Of The Missing Gold Forceps Which Disappeared When He Kissed A Rich Old Maid Upon Whom He Was Operating, When His Beautiful Nurse Disappeared

BY JOHN P. MEDBURY

I think I have one of the strangest stories ever told and my reason for telling it is to right a terrible wrong that had been done an innocent party through no fault of my own.

I am a doctor in a small middle western town and enjoy a very comfortable practice. My father used to run a meat market and wanted me to go into business with him, but I loved animals too much so I compromised by becoming a surgeon.

I had lovely offices on an exclusive street and it was my good fortune to be located where ninety per cent of the residents still had their appendix. Of course, some of them had had their tonsils out and their adenoids removed, but a doctor can't expect everything.

Stitches With Individuality

I worked hard and soon became an expert on incisions. My skill in sewing up a wound gave me a world wide recognition and my stitches were so individual that anybody could look at your scars and tell that I had done the sewing. My needlework was so perfect that every seamstress in town became jealous of me.

I had as my nurse, a beautiful and brainy girl from a fine family. For obvious reasons I will call her Miss Brown, which of course was not Miss Vorbeck's name.

She had been with me a little over three years when the President of the First National Bank presented me with a gorgeous pair of solid gold forceps in appreciation for the neat work I did in taking his wife's appendix out.

Prize-Winning Scars

The incision on her side was so perfect that he used to win a lot of prizes by exhibiting her at county fairs. She won so many ribbons with her scars that she couldn't wear them all at one time.

My nurse had admired the gold forceps from the very day I got them, but of course I thought nothing strange about that at the time. I had been thinking very seriously of marrying Miss Brown, as she was madly in love with me, and I also returned her affections.

Just because we both loved each other, that was no sign we shouldn't get married. A doctor is better off anyway being married, because it shields him from the overtures of flirtatious wives who often come to his office more for romance than medical attention.

When an operation was completed I made it a practice to always kiss my patient. This was just a little service of mine, but you'd be surprised how an insignificant thing like this brought in business. Women who had nothing whatsoever the matter with them used to be operated on just for that final gesture.

Mystery

One afternoon when I had completed the last stitch in a patient and given her the usual kiss, I happened to look up from my work and noticed the nurse crying. This particular patient was an old maid from an adjoining town and far from beautiful. I couldn't imagine why the nurse would be so jealous of such an unattractive woman.

The gold forceps that had been missing these many months

I said nothing about it though, put on my hat and coat and went out to the country club for a game of golf. The next morning when I came down to the office the nurse was not there and shortly afterward I discovered that my solid gold forceps were also missing.

I immediately phoned to the police and told them I was sure Miss Brown had taken them in a moment of revenge. The officers caught her just as she was boarding a train for New York, but in spite of searching her baggage, could not find the forceps. I knew she was the thief, though, and told her so, but as I had no concrete evidence against her, the police refused to arrest her for robbery.

On Her Trail.

She went to New York and I had her trailed by private detectives. They watched her day and night, but could get no glimpse of the missing forceps. I certainly gave her credit for being able to so cleverly keep them concealed.

Just because she had seen me kiss that spinster after the operation she became crazed with jealousy and probably figured the best way to get even with me and hurt me was to steal my gold forceps which she knew I prized so highly.

I still had to make a living, though, so with heavy heart I went on with my operations until I had removed every appendix in town. Now and then I would run into the old maid who had caused all my trouble and grief and I began to hate her.

A Determined Decision.

I could see that she was starving for one more kiss from me as she was always talking about another operation. Finally business got bad and I needed money, and as this spinster was wealthy I decided to operate on her again for the sum of two thousand dollars, but I felt like a cad because deep down in my heart I knew she didn't need the operation.

The next morning found her on the operating table and I had no sooner made the incision in her side, when my knife ran into something which was so hard that it broke the blade. I grabbed another knife, made another incision a little to the right of the previous wound and what should I find but the gold forceps that had been missing these many months.

In sewing up this patient the first time I had left the forceps inside and it wasn't the kiss that made the nurse cry. She cried because she loved me and it broke her heart to think I was getting careless in my work. I am glad to know she's not a thief, but I still think she was jealous over the little kiss I always gave each patient, because she has married a veterinary surgeon and the only reason she married him is because she knows he isn't going to kiss HIS patients after an operation.

Nation's Big Diet Change Adds To Farmers' Ills, Study Shows

By WILLIAM S. NEAL
International News Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, July 17.—A remarkable change in the choice of food of the American people in the last score of years, which has contributed to the agricultural ills of the nation, is under close study by experts of the department of agriculture.

The World war, because of disturbed conditions throughout the world, also was an important factor in the change of diet of the people, these studies reveal.

The change from manual labor to machinery, reducing the consumption of heavy foods; the rise of dairy products and popularizing of other new foods, the business depression and the craze for feminine slimness all have had their part.

Out of the study of experts comes the apparent conclusion that the quickest way to solve the agricultural problem would be for the people to turn to a beef diet, or to a beef and dairy products diet. Much more land is needed to produce these foods than sugar, wheat and other cereals.

In studying the problem, Dr. O F. Baker, senior agricultural economist of the department, has found that after the World war there was a notable decline in the use of bread, corn meal and other cereal foods, and an increase in the consumption of milk, meat, sugar, fresh vegetables and fruits.

This trend has been checked by the economic depression. Consumption of meat declined four per cent in 1930 as compared to 1929, and was 12 per cent below 1924. There was a decline of about two or three per cent in milk in 1930, and apparently a sharp decline in the use of sugar.

The consumption of bread, vegetables and fruits showed little change in 1930 from the previous year.

Showing the great change in the country's diet, Dr. Baker says that from 1914 to 1918 the average consumption per person of wheat, corn, oats, rye, buckwheat and barley for human food totalled 310 pounds a year but from 1924 to 1928 it was but 230 pounds.

On the other hand, until recently, the American people were eating a third more sugar and probably a fourth more milk and dairy products and nearly a fifth more meat and vegetables, and more fruit.

The experts say that it requires three or four acres to produce as much food, measured in calories, of milk or pork, or 12 acres devoted to beef production, as one and one-half acres of wheat made into flour, or one-third of an acre of sugar meats. It is clear, says Dr. Baker, that an increase in the consumption of milk and meat, especially beef, would increase the need for farm land.

Based upon a growth of population, after allowing for changes in diet, about 50,000,000 acres of land more should be required to feed the people than was needed during the war. Actually, only 6,000,000 more acres are used.

This is explained through use of the automobile and tractor, which released land used to provide food for animals to provide food for humans, better farming methods and other causes.

In view of the decline in the birth rate and the policy of immigration restriction, Dr. Baker concludes that it is likely that not much more land than is now used will be needed to feed the American people for an indefinite period.

Miss Liberty To Have Blinking Crown Of Gems

Distorting Shadows Will Be Removed And Sparkling Crown Added

REST PLATFORMS FOR STAIRWAYS

(International News Service)

NEW YORK, July 17.—Miss Liberty with a double chin? Crow's feet around the eyes of Bartholdi's famous goddess.

So insists the United States army, for all its renown for gallantry.

Just what has been discovered by officers of the second corps area at Governors Island, whose official ward Miss Liberty happens to be, is that when darkness falls and the batteries of floodlights are placed in operating distorting shadows form in the wrong spots, thus imparting an appearance quite unlike that of the lady's comely daytime self.

To correct this condition Major General Hanson E. Ely, commanding the second corps area, has completed arrangements for the installation of a modern system of floodlighting the Statue of Liberty.

An entirely new feature will be the effect of a sparkling crown which is to be added to the after-dark allure of the world-famed lady of New York Harbor by the installation for the first time of lights in the 21 windows of the crown of the statue. A blinker system will create the impression of glittering jewels.

Miss Liberty's incandescent "beauty bath" is not the only improvement contemplated, according to General Ely. At a total cost of more than $30,000, including $14,385 for the new lighting system, a more or less general renovation of the monument is planned. A new elevator will replace the present one running from the ground entrance in the pedestal to the feet of the bronze statue proper.

The outer sides of the granite pedestal upon which the bronze figure stands are to be repaired in several places and probably the accumulated film of harbor smoke and grime removed from their surface. Inside the pedestal, safety treads and handrails on the stairs and other necessary aids to safety and convenience of tourists will be installed.

Work on the great bronze goddess will include welding a number of minor rifts in the figure's metal covering, installation of new windows in the head, and erection of rest platforms on the tortuous spiral stairs circling within the statue from feet to head.

"With 350,000 or more people from all parts of the world visiting the Statue of Liberty each year, the monument is one of the most famous in existence," General Ely declared. "It is fitting that its repair and upkeep be carefully looked after by our government.

"It may be recalled that the late President Grover Cleveland, when he unveiled the statue on October 26, 1886, said:

"'Instead of grasping in her hands the thunderbolt of terror and death, she holds aloft the light which illuminates the way to man's enfranchisement. We shall not forget that Liberty has here made her home, nor shall her chosen altar be neglected.'"

When the new lighting system is placed in operation, probably in the latter part of August, the Statue of Liberty is expected to be visible not only to lower New York City, Brooklyn, Staten Island and parts of New Jersey, but to vessels as far away as Sandy Hook.

France's Palace Again Gay With A Woman In It

Formal Dinners Honor Visiting Royalty In President's Palace

(International News Service)

PARIS, July 17.—The President's palace in Paris promises to be gayer than it has been for many a year now that there is a woman in it. Monsieur Paul Doumer, newly elected President is married and has a family and is very anxious to receive as widely as the etiquiette and protocal of the Third Republic will allow.

President Doumer began his career with a series of formal society dinners, one of the first being in honor of Queen Wilhelmina and her daughter, the Princess Julianna who are making Paris a visit.

Madame Doumer shared the Presidential box with her husband for the Grand Prix race and issued invitations for a large garden-party and reception with dancing. This was the forerunner of many such garden parties and fashionable receptions, the first the Elysee palace has known for many years.

In the meantime, some French dailies are agitating the question of more pay for the President. For, from a financial point of view it is plain to be seen that it is not a paying proposition, that of being the Chief of the French Republic. According to figures given in the "Journal des Debats," it is the least profitable job which falls to the heads of government anywhere.

Mr. Doumer will receive 3,600,000 francs a year out of which he must pay taxes amounting to 700,000 francs and expenses for entertaining visitors which may be a very large figure.

The King of England receives the equivalent of sixteen times this sum: the King of Belgians has an allowance of 6,745,000 francs: the King of Italy has 14,462,000 francs to spend and the yearly stipend of the King of Denmark is 7,250,000 francs. The Queen of Holland may spend as much as 12,324,000 francs yearly.

Wilson's Widow at Unveiling

This heroic statue of Woodrow Wilson, wartime President of the United States, was unveiled with appropriate ceremonies in the presence of Mrs. Wilson on July 4 at Poznan, Poland, the imposing monument being erected as a gift of Ignace Paderewski, first President of Poland. Mrs. Wilson may be seen standing in front of the statue with President Moscicki of Poland. Gutzon Borglum was the sculptor.

Mexico Starts Archeological Projects Rivalling Egypt's

By PIERRE J. HUSS
International News Service Staff Correspondent

MEXICO CITY, July 17.—Archeological exploration projects rivalling those of Egypt have been mapped out this year by the Mexican government.

Spurred by the hope of penetrating the mystery which blankets Mexican civilization prior to the Spanish conquests, the Mexican Department of Pre-Spanish Monuments has set for itself the task of slashing up whole acres of jungle at places where growth is believed to have swallowed ancient cities. Buried ruins already discovered will be uncovered.

The project presents abundant difficulties. The climate and jungle alone offer enormous handicaps. In addition, there is always danger from hostile tribes who might resent intrusion into their isolated country.

The rescue of buried cities from their jungle grave is of manifold importance. The government views it from a standpoint of enhanced tourist attraction and the expansion of historical data on native civilization; scientits have their eye on the enormous quantities of data they believe to have been hidden by the ancients to prevent its destruction by Cortes and others who invaded the land with fire and sword in an effort to wipe out heathen civilization.

The govenrment's 1931 exploration program in itself reads like a book of romance and adventure. It includes uncovering of the two newly discovered Tolec fortified cities in the State of Queretaro, of the "Pathway of the Dead" near Mexico City, clearing and reconstruction of the Mayan city of Patleque in Chiapas and the newly found pyramid at Mayan Uxmal in Yucatan, and additional explorations at the Zapotec site of Monte Alban in Oaxacas.

The famous Mayan ruin of Chichen Itza, Yucatan, will be completely rebuilt.

Most interesting of the projects are the two sites of Toluquilla and Ranas, perched on high cliffs a score of miles apart in the Sierra Gorda mountains of Queretaro. They are veritable fortress cities whose only approaches are defended by double and triple walls of such thickness that even Spanish cannons proved futile assault weapons.

Mysteriously abandoned by an early civilization, the jungle growth scon hid them from sight and enmeshed them in almost impenetrable vegetation, shielding from the outside world a probable treasure house of data and precious objects. According to archeologists in charge of the explorations, evidence found up to now indicates that these two sites may prove to be most important as yet found in Mexico.

Excavations revealed a mixture of Toltec and Totonac cultures, suggesting a possible conquet by one tribe and subsequent mastery of the region. Beautifully sculptured "yokes," mysterious stone objects resembling a yoke for oxen, have been found. It is the common belief that these horseshoe-shaped pieces were used to weigh down the head of victims in human sacrifice.

The Toltecs and Totonacs antedated the Aztecs, lords of middle Mexico long before Columbus reached American shores to herald the later conquest of the Mexican country by Spain. The Toltecs became so powerful that they conquered the Mayas of Yucatan, 1000 miles away.

Excavation of the "Pathway of the Dead," one of the best known of archeological fields, has long been awaited with much interest. Nearly a mile and one-half in length, it starts on the south side of the "Pyramid of the Moon" and continues in a lane lined on both sides with artificial mounds. Stone sarcophagi discovered in these mounds contained human bones and relics buried with the dead in ancient times.

Twenty acres of the ruined Mayan town of Palenque, containing some of that civilization's best art examples, have been dug from the thick forest that crept over it in succeeding centuries. Excavation work there is progressing rapidly.

The new pyramid found by the Tulane University expedition at Uxmal last year will be entirely rebuilt. Its discovery was considered an archeological find of primary importance.

Much new data may be expected after excavations of the Zapotec ruins of Monte Alban, situated along mountain ridges dotted with fortresses and shrines.

An expedition has been sent to Chichen Itza to reconstruct the Ball Court and Temple of the Tigers. courts for ball games of intensely The ancient Mayans used these was a rectangula- field enclosed by religious significance. The Ball Court massive walls, with the Indians playing a game not unlike our modern basketball.

CROSS-EYED CONFESSIONS

A Surgeon's Stirring Confession

The Mystery Of The Missing Gold Forceps Which Disappeared When He Kissed A Rich Old Maid Upon Whom He Was Operating, When His Beautiful Nurse Disappeared

BY JOHN P. MEDBURY

I think I have one of the strangest stories ever told and my reason for telling it is to right a terrible wrong that had been done an innocent party through no fault of my own.

I am a doctor in a small middle western town and enjoy a very comfortable practice. My father used to run a meat market and wanted me to go into business with him, but I loved animals too much so I compromised by becoming a surgeon.

I had lovely offices on an exclusive street and it was my good fortune to be located where ninety per cent of the residents still had their appendix. Of course, some of them had had their tonsils out and their adenoids removed, but a doctor can't expect everything.

Stitches With Individuality

I worked hard and soon became an expert on incisions. My skill in sewing up a wound gave me a world wide recognition and my stitches were so individual that anybody could look at your scars and tell that I had done the sewing. My needlework was so perfect that every seamstress in town became jealous of me.

I had as my nurse, a beautiful and brainy girl from a fine family. For obvious reasons I will call her Miss Brown, which of course was not Miss Vorbeck's name.

She had been with me a little over three years when the President of the First National Bank presented me with a gorgeous pair of solid gold forceps in appreciation for the neat work I did in taking his wife's appendix out.

Prize-Winning Scars

The incision on her side was so perfect that he used to win a lot of prizes by exhibiting her at county fairs. She won so many ribbons with her scars that she couldn't wear them all at one time.

My nurse had admired the gold forceps from the very day I got them, but of course I thought nothing strange about that at the time. I had been thinking very seriously of marrying Miss Brown, as she was madly in love with me, and I also returned her affections.

Just because we both loved each other, that was no sign we shouldn't get married. A doctor is better off anyway being married, because it shields him from the overtures of flirtatious wives who often come to his office more for romance than medical attention.

When an operation was completed I made it a practice to always kiss my patient. This was just a little section of mine, but you'd be surprised how an insignificant thing like this brought in business. Women who had nothing whatsoever the matter with them used to be operated on just for that final gesture.

Mystery

One afternoon when I had completed the last stitch in a patient and given her the usual kiss, I happened to look up from my work and noticed the nurse crying. This particular patient was an old maid from an adjoining town and far from beautiful. I couldn't imagine why the nurse would be so jealous of such an unattractive woman.

The gold forceps that had been missing these many months

I said nothing about it though, put on my hat and coat and went out to the country club for a game of golf. The next morning when I came down to the office the nurse was not there and shortly afterward I discovered that my solid gold forceps were also missing.

I immediately phoned to the police and told them I was sure Miss Brown had taken them in a moment of revenge. The officers caught her just as she was boarding a train for New York, but in spite of searching her baggage, could not find the forceps. I knew she was the thief, though, and told her so, but as I had no concrete evidence against her, the police refused to arrest her for robbery.

On Her Trail.

She went to New York and I had her trailed by private detectives. They watched her day and night, but could get no glimpse of the missing forceps. I certainly gave her credit for being able to so cleverly keep them concealed.

Just because she had seen me kiss that spinster after the operation she became crazed with jealousy and probably figured the best way to get even with me and hurt me was to steal my gold forceps which she knew I prized so highly.

I still had to make a living, though, so with heavy heart I went on with my operations until I had removed every appendix in town. Now and then I would run into the old maid who had caused all my trouble and grief and I began to hate her.

A Determined Decision.

I could see that she was starving for one more kiss from me as she was always talking about another operation. Finally business got bad and I needed money, and as this spinster was wealthy I decided to operate on her again for the sum of two thousand dollars, but I felt like a cad because deep down in my heart I knew she didn't need the operation.

The next morning found her on the operating table and I had no sooner made the incision in her side, when my knife ran into something which was so hard that it broke the blade. I grabbed another knife, made another incision a little to the right of the previous wound and what should I find but the gold forceps that had been missing these many months.

In sewing up this patient the first time I had left the forceps inside and it wasn't the kiss that made the nurse cry. She cried because she loved me and it broke her heart to think I was getting careless in my work. I am glad to know she's not a thief, but I still think she was jealous over the little kiss I always gave each patient, because she has married a veterinary surgeon and the only reason she married him is because she knows he isn't going to kiss his patients after an operation.

Nation's Big Diet Change Adds To Farmers' Ills, Study Shows

By WILLIAM S. NEAL
International News Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, July 17.—A remarkable change in the choice of food of the American people in the last score of years, which has contributed to the agricultural ills of the nation, is under close study by experts of the department of agriculture.

The World war, because of disturbed conditions throughout the world, also was an important factor in the change of diet of the people, these studies reveal.

The change from manual labor to machinery, reducing the consumption of heavy foods; the rise of dairy products and popularizing of other new foods, the business depression and the craze for feminine slimness all have had their part.

Out of the study of experts comes the apparent conclusion that the quickest way to solve the agricultural problem would be for the people to turn to a beef diet, or to a beef and dairy products diet. Much more land is needed to produce these foods than sugar, wheat and other cereals.

In studying the problem, Dr. O. E. Baker, senior agricultural economist of the department, has found that after the World war there was a notable decline in the use of bread, with meat and other cereal foods, and an increase in the consumption of milk, meat, sugar, fresh vegetables and fruits.

This trend has been checked by the economic depression. Consumption of meat declined four per cent in 1930 as compared to 1929, and was 12 per cent below 1924. There was a decline of about two or three per cent in milk in 1930, and apparently a sharp decline in the use of sugar.

The consumption of bread, vegetables and fruits showed little change in 1930 from the previous year.

Showing the great change in the country's diet, Dr. Baker says that from 1914 to 1918 the average consumption per person of wheat, flour, oats, rye, buckwheat and barley for human food totalled 340 pounds a year but from 1924 to 1929 it was but 230 pounds.

On the other hand, until recently, the American people were eating a third more sugar and probably a fourth more milk and dairy products and nearly a fifth more meat and vegetables, and more fruit.

The experts say that it requires three or four acres to produce as much food, measured in calories, of milk or pork, or 12 acres devoted to beef production, as one and one-half acres of wheat made into flour, or one-third of an acre of sugar beets. It is clear, says Dr. Baker, that an increase in the consumption of milk and meat, especially beef, would increase the need for farm land.

Based upon a growth of population, after allowing for changes in diet, about 50,000,000 acres of land more should be required to feed the people than was needed during the war. Actually, only 6,000,000 more acres are used.

This is explained through use of the automobile and tractor, which released land used to provide food for animals to provide food for humans, better farming methods and other factors.

In view of the decline in the birth rate and the policy of immigration restriction, Dr. Baker concludes that it is likely that not much more land than is now used will be needed to feed the American people for an indefinite period.

Old Timer Sees San Francisco After 75 Years

Former Resident Finds Little To Remind Him Of Old Town

(International News Service)

SAN FRANCISCO, July 17.—Edward B. Willis hardly recognized the old town—San Francisco—when he came back.

Several rather important changes had taken place since he was here last

For one thing, it wasn't San Francisco then, but Verba Buena, a rip snortin' gun-totin' collection of shacks on a mud flat with the raging temperature of the height of the gold rush.

For another thing, the Montgomery street water-front at which he disembarked was found to be a mile from the present Ferry building and laden with skyscrapers, the heart of the city's financial district.

"Well, I'll swan" remarked Willie, as he looked at the skyline. "When I left there were six churches, 500 saloons and a lot of tents to live in."

Willis, 87 year of age now, from the Confederate Soldier's Home at Richmond, Va., departed from San Francisco seventy-five years ago.

"It was in 1852" he recalled, "that my two brothers, my mother and I came across the Isthmus of Panama on mules and up the coast to the Golden Gate on an old wind-jammer".

Willis' father Edward J. Willis was a 49'er and was the first judge of Court Sessions at Sacramento, sentencing the first men ever legally hanged in California.

BOTH LATE AT WEDDING

(International News Service)

LONDON, July 17.—Being late for one's own wedding may become fashionable if the example of two aristocratic families spreads. Prince Max Karl Joseph Maria zu Hohenlohe-Langenberg, 29, was married to Signorina Luigia Pasquero, 33, at a registrar's office. The bride was twenty minutes late. The bridegroom came half an hour late. They had rushed to England from the continent in order to marry quickly. Prince Max is head of the House of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha. The bride is a member of an old Savoy family. They will live at Mentone, where the prince has a villa.

BLOOD PRESSURE MAY BE REDUCED

High blood pressure is not only dangerous, but entails suffering which often is needless. But you can get rid of the kidney and bladder weakness, blinding headaches, back-break pains and torturing nerve tension while reducing pressure.

Ask your druggist for a box of Wildunger Tee, which contains valuable mineral salts from the famous Wildunger Bad in Germany. Unless the very first box brings grateful, comforting relief, your money back.

A New York doctor while traveling in Germany was so impressed with the results thousands were securing from this great kidney and bladder activator that he brought Wildunger Tee to this country. Many American doctors now prescribe it and report that its benefits are equally surprising here.

You can get Wildunger Tee on the distinct understanding that unless it helps, your money will be refunded to you. It may be had at

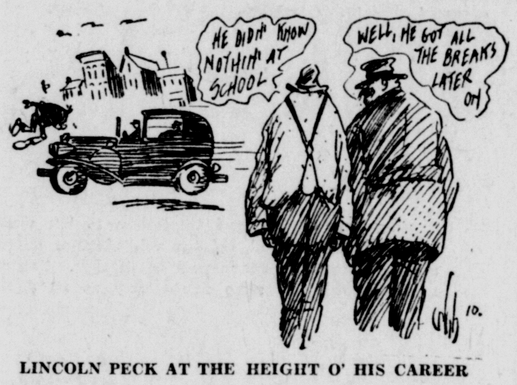
ABE MARTIN — On Fame



LINCOLN PECK AT THE HEIGHT O' HIS CAREER

Nearly ever' time I pick up a newspaper I find a little three or four-line item hidden off t' one side at th' bottom of an inside page tellin' o' th' death o' somebuddy that wuz once famous—some woman who wuz once th' toast o' th' town, or th' idol o' th' stage, or high up in th' world o' letters, or maybe it's some fellor who wuz once prominent in th' councils o' th' nation, an' whose eloquence rocked th' country, or maybe an actor whose genius thrilled th' world, or maybe a financial wizard or great author, whose pen delighted millions. One don't have t' be especially robust or diet t' survive ther fame. Jest think o' th' folks who were settin' on top o' th' world a decade ago an' try an' locate 'em t'day. It seems t' be th' fate o' most great people t' die in attics. If fame don't kill us at our high tide it leaves us worse'n we wuz before. Some famous people hold on fer years an' pass ther declinin' years in comfort, but they're celebrities that saved ther money when savin' wuz good an' only nibbled th' lettuce at banquets. Famous people have ther day. They're fads th' same as snaky girls, mush songs, channel swimmers, an' reform mayors. A notable example of a meteoric career is that o' Lincoln Peck, a carriage painter, who settled here in th' eighties. Lincoln Peck, at th' age o' twenty-seven, stopped a runaway horse at great risk t' himself an' saved two pop'lar ladies from certain death. Fer this act o' heroism he wuz made constable o' th' town. Later he wuz unanimously elected judge an' his famous charge t' th' jury orderin' it t' bring a verdict of acquittal fer Jake Bently who'd killed two lightnin' rod agents, is still remembered. Next, he wuz elected mayor without opposition, an' th' first thing he did wuz order th' gas company t' put th' city streets back jest th' way it'd found 'em seven years before. It began t' look like nothin' could stop Lincoln Peck. He'd been mayor a few months when he wuz made county treasurer. Then "Peck for Gov'nor" clubs begun t' organize all over th' state. In an unguarded moment he married a graceful an' educated lady from Belle Center, Ohio, who'd been attracted t' him thru' an address he'd made some weeks before in Roundhead, Ohio. She had him git his neck shaved, an' then she taught him t' waltz an' how t' hold a fork, then his constituents deserted him. Later he opened a shootin' gallery but it failed. His wife eloped with a golf instructor. He allowed his Elks dues t' lapse, an' finally got so he wore th' same necktie twice in succession, an' one day he disappeared altogether. Last week I picked up a newspaper an' read wher he'd been found dead under a pool table at Dalrymple, Pa.

Relic Of Pioneers, Railroad Track Has 100th Anniversary

(International News Service)

NEW YORK, July 17—A worn and rusty bit of railroad track near Jamesburg, N. J., is this year celebrating its 100th anniversary.

The piece of track lies alongside the Pennsylvania railroad and was originally part of the old Camden & Amboy railroad, one of America's pioneer rail lines. Exposed to the elements for a century past, the old relic of early railroad days is one of the last reminders of the beginning of the steam transportation era.

The Camden & Amboy railroad, first railroad line in the state of New Jersey, was built originally between Bordentown and South Amboy and later extended to Camden. The old rails are now paralleled by modern tracks and passengers who travel between Bordentown, N. J., and South Amboy can see this rusty, worn, 300 foot length of old railroad laid on large granite blocks, just beside the tracks near Jamesburg station about 20 miles northeast of Trenton, the state capital.

It was in the late spring of 1831 that pioneer railroaders, in search of a quicker and more convenient means of transport between Philadelphia and New York than the stage coach and canal boat, laid the old track. It is still in a fair state of preservation and gives promise of lasting another hundred years or so to remind successive generations of the struggles and early successes of the men who laid the foundation of the American civilization.

The Pioneer Camden & South Amboy railroad was chartered by the New Jersey state legislature late in 1830 to operate a combined rail and water route between Philadelphia, Camden and New York City. No iron suitable for its trackage being available in this country, the railroad's first president, Robert L. Stevens, took ship for England to develop with London iron workers a satisfactory design.

Whiling away idle hours on ship board, Stevens worked out an entirely new type of rail for his line, marking a distinct departure from that then in use in England and on the one of two short stretches of railroad already operating in the United States.

He discarded the old wooden rail or stone stringer plated with strap iron then in general use and designed a crude but practical conception of the T-rail which, with slight variations in shape and modernization in size and weight, is still the standard design of railroad tracks today. This rail was used by Robert Stevens for the first time anywhere in the world on the old Camden and South Amboy railroad.

The first lengths of rail for the pioneer line were received by ship from England early in 1831 and the first piece of track, five-sixths of a mile long, was laid during the summer of that year from Bordentown north, in the direction of Hightstown. Later, the line was extended to Hightstown and thence to South Amboy, reaching completion late in 1832.

Although the first cars of the Camden & Amboy railroad were pulled by horses, this pioneer line was one of the first in the country to use a steam locomotive. The "John Bull" engine, made in England, carried the first passengers by steam in the state of New Jersey over the Camden & Amboy a short distance out of Bordentown on November 12, 1831. A large party braved the uncertainties of the new means of transport, including many members of the New Jersey legislature, prominent business and professional men and society leaders.

Madame Murat, wife of Prince Murat, a nephew of Napoleon Bonaparte, who was then living in Bordentown, made the first trip, gaining the distinction of being the first woman to ride on a train hauled by a steam locomotive in New Jersey.

The "John Bull", now preserved to history in the Smithsonian Institution at Washington, was the fourth steam engine in this country to haul cars carrying passengers. The first was the "Stourbridge Lion" which made a trial trip in August 1829, from Honesdale to Carbondale, Pa., on the Delaware & Hudson railroad; the second was the "Best Friend of Charleston," which made a short run on the Charleston & Hamburg railroad in South Carolina in November, 1930, and the third was an unnamed engine which hauled a train over the Mohawk & Hudson railroad between Albany and Schenectady, N. Y., in August, 1831, antedating the "John Bull" by three months.

During the first several years of its operation, passengers on the Camden and South Amboy route were carried in steamboats between Philadelphia and Bordentown and between South Amboy and New York. With the completion of the line between Camden and Bordentown early in 1834, the through rail route across New Jersey was opened.

It is interesting to note that in building this early railroad into South Amboy, iron rails were spiked directly to wooden cross ties for the first time in railroad history.

TAIL LIGHTS FOR HORSES

(International News Service)

WILLIMANTIC, Conn. — Headlights and tail lights for horseback riders are demanded by Harry S. Gaucher, prosecuting attorney here. Gaucher wrote to a local family—father, mother and daughter—who went riding in the cool of the evening, and the father in turn appealed to the motor vehicle department at Hartford. "We have no jurisdiction over horses," was the reply and the evening rides will be abandoned. A new state law insists that horses ridden or led must be protected by lights after dark.

France's Palace Again Gay With A Woman In It

Formal Dinners Honor Visiting Royalty In President's Palace

(International News Service)

PARIS, July 17.—The President's palace in Paris promises to be gayer than it has been for many a year now that there is a woman in it. Monsieur Paul Doumer, newly elected President is married and has a family and is very anxious to receive as widely as the etiquette and protocal of the Third Republic will allow.

President Doumer began his career with a series of formal society dinners, one of the first being in honor of Queen Wilhelmina and her daughter, the Princess Juliana who are making Paris a visit.

Madame Doumer shared the Presidential box with her husband for the Grand Prix race and issued invitations for a large garden-party and reception with dancing. This was the forerunner of many such garden parties and fashionable receptions, the first the Elysee palace has known for many years.

In the meantime, some French dailies are agitating the question of more pay for the President. For, from a financial point of view it is plain to be seen that it is not a paying proposition, that of being the Chief of the French Republic. According to figures given in the "Journal des Debats," it is the least profitable job which falls to the heads of government anywhere.

Mr. Doumer will receive 3,600,000 francs a year out of which he must pay taxes amounting to 700,000 francs and expenses for entertaining visitors which may be a very large figure.

The King of England receives the equivalent of sixteen times this sum: the King of Belgians has an allowance of 6,745,000 francs; the King of Italy has 14,462,000 francs to spend and the yearly stipend of the King of Denmark is 7,250,000 francs. The Queen of Holland may spend as much as 12,324,000 francs yearly.

Wilson's Widow at Unveiling

This heroic statue of Woodrow Wilson, wartime President of the United States, was unveiled with appropriate ceremonies in the presence of Mrs. Wilson on July 4 at Poznan, Poland, the imposing monument being erected as a gift of Ignace Paderewski, first President of Poland. Mrs. Wilson may be seen standing in front of the statue with President Moscicki of Poland. Gutzon Borglum was the sculptor.

Mexico Starts Archeological Projects Rivalling Egypt's

By PIERRE J. HUSS
International News Service Staff Correspondent

MEXICO CITY, July 17.—Archeological exploration projects rivalling those of Egypt have been mapped out this year by the Mexican government.

Spurred by the hope of penetrating the mystery which blankets Mexican civilization prior to the Spanish conquests, the Mexican Department of Pre-Spanish Monuments has set for itself the task of slashing up whole acres of jungle at places where growth is believed to have swallowed ancient cities. Buried ruins already discovered will be uncovered.

The project presents abundant difficulties. The climate and jungle alone offer enormous handicaps. In addition, there is always danger from hostile tribes who might resent intrusion into their isolated country.

The rescue of buried cities from their jungle grave is of manifold importance. The government views it from a standpoint of enhanced tourist attraction and the expansion of historical data on native civilization; scientits have their eye on the enormous quantities of data they believe to have been hidden by the ancients to prevent its destruction by Cortes and others who invaded the land with fire and sword in an effort to wipe out heathen civilization.

The government's 1931 exploration program in itself reads like a book of romance and adventure. It includes uncovering of the two newly discovered Tolec fortified cities in the State of Queretaro, of the "Pathway of the Dead" near Mexico City, clearing and reconstruction of the Mayan city of Patleque in Chiapas and the newly found pyramid at Mayan Uxmal in Yucatan, and additional explorations at the Zapotec site of Monte Alban in Oaxacas.

The famous Mayan ruin of Chichen Itza, Yucatan, will be completely rebuilt.

Most interesting of the projects are the two sites of Tcluquilla and Ranas, perched on high cliffs a score of miles apart in the Sierra Gorda mountains of Queretaro. They are veritable fortress cities whose only approaches are defended by double and triple walls of such thickness that even Spanish cannons proved futile assault weapons.

Mysteriously abandoned by an early civilization, the jungle growth soon hid them from sight and enmeshed them in almost impenetrable vegetation, shielding from the outside world a probable treasure house of data and precious objects. According to archeologists in charge of the explorations, evidence found up to now indicates that these two sites may prove to be most important as yet found in Mexico.

Excavations revealed a mixture of Toltec and Totonac cultures, suggesting a possible conquet by one tribe and subsequent mastery of the region. Beautifully sculptured "yokes," mysterious stone objects resembling a yoke for oxen, have been found. It is the common belief that these horseshoe-shaped pieces were used to weigh down the head of victims in human sacrifice.

The Toltecs and Totonacs antedated the Aztecs, lords of middle Mexico long before Columbus reached American shores to herald the later conquest of the Mexican country by Spain. The Toltecs became so powerful that they conquered the Mayas of Yucatan, 1000 miles away.

Excavation of the "Pathway of the Dead," one of the best known of archeological fields, has long been awaited with much interest. Nearly a mile and one-half in length, it starts on the south side of the "Pyramid of the Moon" and continues in a lane lined on both sides with artificial mounds. Stone sarcophagi discovered in these mounds contained human bones and relics buried with the dead in ancient times.

Twenty acres of the ruined Mayan town of Palenque, containing some of that civilization's best art examples, have been dug from the thick forest that crept over it in succeeding centuries. Excavation work there is progressing rapidly.

The new pyramid found by the Tulane University expedition at Uxmal last year will be entirely rebuilt. Its discovery was considered an archeological find of primary importance.

Much new data may be expected after excavations of the Zapotec ruins of Monte Alban, situated along mountain ridges dotted with fortresses and shrines.

An expedition has been sent to Chichen Itza to reconstruct the Ball Court and Temple of the Tigers, courts for ball games of intensely The ancient Mayans used these was a rectangular field enclosed by religious significance. The Ball Court massive walls, with the Indians playing a game not unlike our modern basketball.

Former New Castle Folks At Pennsylvania Reunion In California

Dr. Thomas Griffiths, Former New Castle Boy, Writes Of Reunion

Says Former Residents Of City And County Were Well Represented

In a letter received by The News today, a glowing account of the Pennsylvania counties picnic held in Bixby Park, Long Beach, Calif., is given by Dr. Thomas Griffiths, former New Castle boy, now residing in Los Angeles, who was present for the occasion.

The picnic was held July 12, 1931, and the Dutch, Welsh, Irish, English and Italians, all came with well filled baskets of food, Dr. Griffiths relates.

Lawrence county was well represented, and former residents of New Castle, of course predominated in number.

Some were there with hair as whit as snow, while others were mere youngsters, and many of them came with their small children, descendants of the former Lawrence County residents, to whom the old home residence is only known of through stories told by their parents.

Were it not for the palms and other unusual species of vegetation, and the shimmering sea nearby, the old New Castle folks would have thought they were back home. Dr. Griffiths states.

This is an annual picnic, and most of those residing in Southern California, attend every year, and are well repaid in the reminiscences that take place.

The following old New Castle folks were in attendance:

Mrs. W. C. Price, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Bonna and children; Thomas Edwards and family, including a fine grandson; Mr. and Mrs. Morgan Llewellyn and son; Mr. and Mrs. Harry Preston and son; Henry Badger and family; James Hastings and family; Mr. and Mrs. Richard Richards and family; Dr. Lenore Gageby, the two daughters of Rev. Johns former pastor of the Emanuel Baptist church; Mrs. Blanche Hanna, Mr. and Mrs. Abbot; Dr. Thomas Griffiths, brother of Mrs. W. J. Isaac and Mrs. Martha L. Thomas of New Castle.

After the dinner had been served in the grove, to which any stranger to the crowd who had formerly resided in New Castle was invited; Harry Bonna was called upon to lead in singing. He also read a beautiful poem which he had prepared for the occasion. Mrs. W. C. Price was also called upon to recite a poem in Welsh. Mrs. Lillian Henry, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Richards was honored as the chosen one for the day.

Other New Castle folks were present, Dr. Griffiths states, but he was unable to secure their names.

SHARON, July 17—Through the courtesy of United States Senator James J. The invitation will be extended through Senator Davis.

The last Legislature and Governor Pinchot approved an appropriation of $1,500,000 for the project.

Back in the Old Home Town

Harking back to the carefree days of his childhood, Calvin Coolidge, thirtieth President of the United States, recently went a-visiting back to the little Vermont village of Plymouth where he was born. Here the former Chief Executive and Mrs. Coolidge are shown on the steps of Plymouth's "general store" surrounded by a group of natives. Note the sign hanging overhead which proudly proclaims that Plymouth is Coolidge's "old home town."

College Survey Shows Student Success Ratio

Pupils From Big Schools Make Better Records Than Those From Small

(International News Service)

COLUMBIA, Mo., July 17.—Students from large high schools generally make better grades in college than those from small schools, it was found by Dr. Raymond L. Garnett in a survey of the freshmen class at the University of Missouri.

He concludes that a student ranking in the highest one-third of his high school class has twice as good a chance to succeed in college as does a student in the middle third of the class, and four times as good a chance as does a student in the lowest third.

The 1929 freshmen class in the university was found to be composed of 47 per cent of the students from the upper third of high school graduating classes, 36 per cent from the middle third, and 17 per cent from the lowest third.

About 71.2 per cent of the highest third were successful in maintaining an average grade of "M," or medium, in the university. Only 31.5 per cent in the middle third, and 13.9 per cent in the lowest third succeeded in the same way.

In this exceedingly interesting analysis of the freshmen class, Dr. Garnett finds that the women, outnumbered by the men by almost two to one, make better grades and give better indication of success in maintaining an "M" average than the men.

Social factors, varying from the nationality of the student's parents to the necessity of working part time while going to school, are examined in making the report. Eighty per cent of the class are of English, Scotch, German and Irish stock, and of these the Scotch and German students appear more successful.

An only child Dr. Garnett indicates, does not succeed as well in the university as the student who has one or two brothers or sisters; but students from families of two, eight or nine succeed best. Students whose fathers engaged in professional or clerical work appear to have an advantage in rate success.

"Family income does not appear directly to be a factor in the success of the university students," the report states. More than one-third of the students in the class came from families with an annual income of less than $3,000, while one-fifth came from families having an income of $10,000 and above.

Dr. Garnett concludes, however, that students from families having an annual income of less than $1,500 appear to have met with the same degree of success as the students from families having an income of $10,000.

He arrives in Grove City following a Pittsburgh meeting of the trustees of his committee in Pittsburgh.

William Carpenter of the University of Seattle, Washington at Seattle is here. Carpenter is a graduate here in 1930.

ATTENDS CONFERENCE

R. G. Walters represented Grove City College at the conference of educators heid here at Pitt University on Junior College work. Walters also addressed commerce students of the university during his stay. He is head of the placement bureau at the local college.

CONSOLIDATION DELAYED

Consolidation of the schools of Grove City and Pine township which has been a subject of conversation in both districts for some months, has been held up for the time being due to the refusal of the State Council of Education to give Pine township any special appropriation at this time.

If the township were to send all their scholars to the Grove City schools, both elementary as well as high school, a 50 mill tax would be needed.

The township has 13 school houses many of them in a very deplorable condition. The township is in a financial jam. It is hoped to combine a part of their schools with those of Grove City reducing expenses.

Financial assistance was needed to accomplish this. The district will have to evolve some other plan of financing their problem.

American Sugar, Or The Lack Of It, Leads To Prison Mutiny

By PIERRE J. HUSS

International News Service Staff Correspondent

MEXICO CITY, July 17.—The harmless little white cubes of American sugar caused a near mutiny recently in historic Belem, the city prison here.

The rioting prisoners were pacified after an hour of hectic demonstration, but while the bedlam lasted the authorities had their hands full.

Until the Mexican government raised the import duty on American sugar, the 4,000 inmates of the ancient jail where once the Spanish monks paced the corridors in prayer, were given a daily portion of American cube sugar to sweeten their coffee. The imported sugar was cheaper than the brown Mexican-made "piloncillo."

The increased sugar import duties reversed the situation, consequently the economizing hand of the government reached out and "piloncillo" took the place of the American product, it pleased the prisoners least of all.

A week of scowling and muttering finally culminated in a bedlam that in noise and excitement rivalled that which occured in American penal institutions within the past year. The prisoners, offended by a daily portion of brown sugar, seized their cups of coffe after an evening meal and spilled them upon the ground. They threw the sugar lumps at the "trustiees," who scurried for cover. Chairs, tables, mattresses and other loose objects sailed in all directions amidst a din of yelling and shouting.

The more vengeful demonstrators, apparently seeing an opportunity to punish the person responsible for the preparation of their meals and coffee, dragged the luckless chef from his kitchen and poured hot coffee down his back.

Order was finally restored and the demonstrators marched back to the cells. "Piloncillo," however, remains on the bill of fare.

Boston T Wharf Fish Industry's Unique Center

(International News Service)

BOSTON, Mass., July 17.—Little T wharf in the heart of this city's port line is the scene of a unique fishing industry.

Manned by immigrant fishermen from Southern Italy, the trade has grown in leaps and bounds during the past few years and has developed into a well organized and thoroughly modern industry.

The fishermen ply their trade among the foreign-born, their industry centering about a wide variety of sea-food from the baby octopi to the brilliantly colored red fish much to the delight of the foreign born palate.

Discussing the industry, W. D. Russo, well-known dealer in special kinds of sea-food, declared that Yankees are in too much of a rush to bother with these delectable seafoods because they have to be prepared in a special manner.

"Many of the sweetest and most tasty morsels," said Russo, "are protected by bony shells of intricate formation and have to be 'shelled' with care. In the course of a year we ship from this fish market thousands of pounds of these special seafoods to the Chinese, Jewish and Latin centers in all the large cities of the country."

When first started the fishing industry was carried on by a few depending on oars for power to operate their tiny boats but this later gave way to sails and now the work is carried on with greater speed and progress through large motorized boats.

FOR DEFECTIVE SPEECH

STATE COLLEGE, Pa., July 17.—Only three of twentw-two cases of defective speech among students of Pennsylvania State College could not be corrected during the past year, Herbert Koepp-Baker, instructer in public speech reported to the college faculty here. Of the twenty-two cases, only four had to be referred to a physician, the instructor stated.

Scientists Tell Why Motors Knock

(International News Service)

PARIS, July 17.—A report on why motors knock, presented before the French academy of Science, is considered of great value to the motor industry.

Professors Dumanoir and Mondain-Monval who conducted the experiments which led to the report proved that when the heat of the walls of combustion chambers passes 270 degrees Cent., the phenomenon known as "knocking" occurs. Tests taken of the gases at that moment show that peroxides have been formed.

If the ignition is cut off the motor will continue to work for a short space of time, not as the result of self-ignition, but owing to the continued explosion of these peroxides at this high temperature. Before the motor knocks no trace of peroxide can be found.

Agrarian Law In Mexico Is Under New Fire

Foes Of Measure Assail It As Cause Of Depression

By PIERRE J. HUSS
International News Service Staff Correspondent
Article No. 1.

MEXICO CITY, July 17.—Mexico's agrarian law is under fire again following a declaration in the chamber by Deputy Gonzalo Bautista of the government party that the 1930 crop represented only 28 per cent of production in 1910.

Unremittent foes of the measure immediately assailed it as the basic cause of the agricultural depression, renewing agitation for repeal of the law and the restoration of all lands to their original owners.

Without specifically admitting that the experiment had proved a failure, Deputy Gonzola Bautista urged speedy completion of the agrarian program, blaming the startling slump in agricultural production on the uncertainty of status on the part of landholders and agrarian. In other words, according to the deputy, the essential thing to do is to decide beyond doubt whether the system of communal landholding in Mexico will be retained as an inviolable part of the constitution or whether it will be resuscitated as a failure.

In reviewing the situation, he quoted production figures as supplied by the department of agriculture. These figures revealed that in 1910 the cereal production in Mexico totalled 4,705,789 tons. In 1930 the output fell to 1,324,529 tons.

Cereal production diminished year by year after 1910, the figures showed, with the biggest decline occuring from 1926 on. The latter year tons, in 1927 to 2,078,817 tons, in 1928 to 2,172,854 tons and in 1929 to 1,514,701 tons.

That the fault lay in small acreage production—in other words with the new owners of tracts acquired under the agrarian law—was indicated by the deputy's figures tracing a steady decline from 1926 in the amount of cereal kilos produced annually on each hectare or land (each 2.47 acres).

Each hectare of cereals produced 670 kilos in 1926; in 1927 the average fell to 640 kilos; in 1928 to 590 kilos, in 1929 to 517 kilos and in 1930 to 478 kilos.

The all important bean crop of Mexico totalled 336,127 tons in 1910. According to the deputy's figures, it had declined to 213,668 tons by 1926. In 1927 only 195,379 tons of beans were produced, 176,134 in 1928 and 94,805 in 1929. Production per hectare fell from 202 kilos in 1926 to 129 kilos in 1929.

Consequently Mexico was forced year by year to import wheat at high prices from the United States and Canada This situation has become more complicated with enactment restrictions in regards of foreign grain importations. Beans were shipped in by the ton from Japan.

Oldest Citizen Of U. S. In France Is A Flying Fan

(International News Service)

PARIS, July 17.—Just fifty-two years ago, Mr. Frank S. Lahm came to Paris from a little town in Northern Ohio expecting to take a rest for six months. He just celebrated his 85th birthday in the capital where he has been ever since. Mr. Lahm is undoubtedly the oldest American resident in France, both as to age and as to length of residence on French soil. He seems none the worse for it.

He has no rules to keep young, he says but has always tried to eat the right things and also sleep the necessary eight hours.

Mr. Lahm is known to all French Baloonists for he was one of the very first who ever went up in the clouds over France. He was a passenger with Wilbur Wright in November 1908, five years after the sensational flight. Mr. Lahm was then 62 years old. His most recent ascent was two years ago when he was 83.

Mr. Lahm's son, General Frank P. Lahm, was Wilbur Wright's first air pasenger in September 1908 and was also the first to win the Gordon Bennett Balloon trophy in 1906. He was the youngest man in the race and he is now the oldest aviator in the United States Army, in command of the flying center at San Antonio.

The Aero Club de France, of which Mr. Lahm is one of the original members, recently presented him with a beautiful bronze plaque of service, commemorating his membership of the Directing Committee.

STRAWBERRY YIELD BIG

(International News Service)

ALLENTOWN, Pa., July 17.—This was one of the best strawberry seasons this section has known with many large scale growers reporting banner yields. Hon. Albert E Rinn, a former member of the State Legislature now a Squire of Saucon, near here, is one of the largest growers, and reported a highly gratifying season. Numerous strawberry clubs, formed by children from 10 to 15 years old, turned out excellent products besides giving the youngsters fine training. Many large scale growers realized more than $1,000 per acre on their strawberries whereas they had made little more than $15 per acre when growing wheat on the same land.

Christian Communism

"Brass Tacks" On The Sunday School Lesson

The Golden Text

He said, It is more blessed to give than to receive.—Acts 20:35.

By DR. ALVIN E. BELL

One comes upon the story of the communism of the early Christian church recorded in Acts 4:32-37 as upon a rare and fragrant flower in the early dawn with the freshness of the dew of heaven upon it: "And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul; neither said any of them that aught of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common. And with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus: and great grace was upon them all. Neither was there any among them that lacked: for as many as were possessors of lands or houses sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold, and laid them down at the apostles' feet: and the distribution was made unto every man according as he had need."

A Heavenly Ideal

This heavenly ideal, it should never be forgotten, is only possible in a fellowship of faith and love such as that which gave it birth, viz., in a "multitude of them that believed and were of one heart and of one soul." These were all regenerate men and women of a common faith, a common hope and a common love, and therefore "communism" was natural and inevitable among them. Those who talk most of "communism" today utterly forget this basic fact. There can be no communism in material things without first its root and soil of communism in spiritual realities: "on heart and one soul." To attempt to put anything of the sort into practice without this essential atmosphere of spiritual harmony would be productive of chaos, and must end in failure. Atheism and communism are unthinkable companions! The communism of apostolic days was first Christian, and came as the flower of the Christian faith and hope and love. It can be reproduced only as it was produced then, by the power of the Spirit in believing souls desirous of glorifying Christ.

Christian Social Service

However, this is no excuse for passing up this heavenly ideal as thoroughly visionary and unworthy of emulation in any sense. The unselfishness of those early Christians who put the spiritualities always above the temporalities, and who had a keen social conscience that suffered with every suffering brother, points the way to better social conditions for all succeeding ages. As they cared for their poor within the fellowship, so that "there was none among them that lacked," so the spirit of unselfishness and considerateness of others will help to ameliorate the condition of the poor today throughout the world. Christianity must bear its fruit today as then. It must point the way for the world in paths of serving love now as then. Its followers, now as then, must cease emphasizing ownership of possessions and think and act in terms of stewardship for Christ as Lord, and use these possessions for his glory and the good of those in need. The "communism" of the early church was not legislative nor compulsory, but spiritual and voluntry.

(The International Uniform Lesson for July 19 is Acts 4:32-35; 6:1-4; II Cor. 9:1-7, the subject being, "Social Service in the Early Church," and the Golden Text, Acts 20:35, "He said, It is more blessed to give than to receive.")

Sports Bag Like Binocular Case, Selling In Paris

(International News Service)

Midsummer odds and ends seen in smart Paris shops include the sports bag that is made like a binocular case, and is slung from the shoulder. It comes in all kinds of fine leathers with metal clasps.

The bag for more habille occasions comes in satin or soft brocade with very simple frames. Smartly new are georgette evening bags to match the color of one's frock, with the envelope flap closing held shut by a band of pearl beads that encircles the bag.

A bag in a fabric resembling straw is being used for ensembles, with the hat matching. It has metal springs for the handle.

Belt and necklace novelties come in matching leather. A belt in brown deerskin with punchwork and narrow strips of kid also used on the steel buckles, has matching necklace with antelope tassels. Another set is in green octopus-skin and black patent.

In metal lines, there are sets of nickel and a necklace, earrings, belt buckle and bracelet come in silver and jet.

Looking ahead to a cold winter, one of the prominent glove-shops is showing cold resisting hand-covering for zero weather. It has a sectional cuff which is banded tightly into the wrist.

Autos Must Carry Two Red Lanterns

(International News Service)

MEXICO CITY, July 17.—Two red lanterns in addition to regulation car lights must be carried by motorists who travel on Mexican highways at night, according to a decree issued by the Department of Commmunications.

These lanterns are to be placed five yards in front and five yards in the rear of every car when the driver is forced to stop on a federal highway at night. Head and taillights must also be kept on. Violation means a fine of $25.

In connection with these precautionary measures, it was pointed out that 14,000 persons have been killed in automobile accidents in Mexico and its vicinity in twenty years.

FRIGHT IS BLAMED FOR MAN'S DEATH

WARREN, Pa., July 17.—Apoplexy superinduced by fright and overexertion was given by physicians as the probable cause of the death of Frank M. Stanton, 60, of Clarendon, who was caught beneath a small truck, in which he had been riding, when it rolled over a 5-foot embankment while the man was attempting to keep it from tipping over. Stanton's machine had been parked along the Roosevelt highway, about four miles west of here, when the edge of the bank gave way, permitting the car to roll over.

Every country must have two parties, else how could people vote when hard times come.

Old Timer Sees San Francisco After 75 Years

Former Resident Finds Little To Remind Him Of Old Town

(International News Service)

SAN FRANCISCO, July 17.—Edward B. Willis hardly recognized the old town—San Francisco—when he came back.

Several rather important changes had taken place since he was here last

For one thing, it wasn't San Francisco then, but Verba Buena, a rip snortin' gun-totin' collection of shacks on a mud flat with the raging temperature of the height of the gold rush.

For another thing, the Montgomery street water-front at which he disembarked was found to be a mile from the present Ferry building and laden with skyscrapers, the heart of the city's financial district.

"Well, I'll swan" remarked Willis, as he looked at the skyline. "When I left there were six churches, 500 saloons and a lot of tents to live in."

Willis, 87 year of age now, from the Confederate Soldier's Home at Richmond, Va., departed from San Francisco seventy-five years ago.

"It was in 1852" he recalled, "that my two brothers, my mother and I came across the Isthmus of Panama on mules and up the coast to the Golden Gate on an old wind-jammer".

Willis' father Edward J. Willis was a 49'er and was the first judge of Court Sessions at Sacramento, sentencing the first men ever legally hanged in California.

ABE MARTIN — On Fame

LINCOLN PECK AT THE HEIGHT O' HIS CAREER

Nearly ever' time I pick up a newspaper I find a little three or four-line item hidden off t' one side at th' bottom of an inside page tellin' o' th' death o' somebuddy that wuz once famous—some woman who wuz once th' toast o' th' town, or th' idol o' th' stage, or high up in th' world o' letters, or maybe it's some fellor who wuz once prominent in th' councils o' th' nation, an' whose eloquence rocked th' country, or maybe an actor whose genius thrilled th' world, or maybe a financial wizard or great author, whose pen delighted millions. One don't have t' be especially robust or diet t' survive ther fame. Jest think o' th' folks who were settin' on top o' th' world a decade ago an' try an' locate 'em t'day. It seems t' be th' fate o' most great people t' die in attics. If fame don't kill us at our high tide it leaves us worse'n we wuz before. Some famous people hold on fer years an' pass ther declinin' years in comfort, but they're celebrities that saved ther money when savin' wuz good an' only nibbled th' lettuce at banquets. Famous people have ther day. They're fads th' same as snaky girls, mush songs, channel swimmers, an' reform mayors. A notable example of a meteoric career is that o' Lincoln Peck, a carriage painter, who settled here in th' eighties. Lincoln Peck, at th' age o' twenty-seven, stopped a runaway horse at great risk t' himself an' saved two pop'lar ladies from certain death. Fer this act o' heroism he wuz made constable o' th' town. Later he wuz unanimously elected judge an' his famous charge t' th' jury orderin' it t' bring a verdict of acquittal fer Jake Bently who'd killed two lightnin' rod agents, is still remembered. Next, he wuz elected mayor without opposition, an' th' first thing he did wuz order th' gas company t' put th' city streets back jest th' way it'd found 'em seven years before. It began t' look like nothin' could stop Lincoln Peck. He'd been mayor a few months when he wuz made county treasurer. Then "Peck for Gov'nor" clubs begun t' organize all over th' state. In an unguarded moment he married a graceful an' educated lady from Belle Center, Ohio, who'd been attracted t' him thru' an address he'd made some weeks before in Roundhead, Ohio. She had him git his neck shaved, an' then she taught him t' waltz an' how t' hold a fork, then his constituents deserted him. Later he opened a shootin' gallery but it failed. His wife eloped with a golf instructor. He allowed his Elks dues t' lapse, an' finally got so he wore th' same necktie twice in succession, an' one day he disappeared altogether. Last week I picked up a newspaper an' read wher he'd been found dead under a pool table at Dalrymple, Pa.

Relic Of Pioneers, Railroad Track Has 100th Anniversary

(International News Service)

NEW YORK, July 17—A worn and rusty bit of railroad track near Jamesburg, N. J., is this year celebrating its 100th anniversary.

The piece of track lies alongside the Pennsylvania railroad and was originally part of the old Camden & Amboy railroad, one of America's pioneer rail lines. Exposed to the elements for a century past, the old relic of early railroad days is one of the last reminders of the beginning of the steam transportation era.

The Camden & Amboy railroad, first railroad line in the state of New Jersey, was built originally between Bordentown and South Amboy and later extended to Camden. The old rails are now paralleled by modern tracks and passengers who travel between Bordentown, N. J., and South Amboy can see this rusty, worn, 300 foot length of old railroad laid on large granite blocks, just beside the tracks near Jamesburg station about 20 miles northeast of Trenton, the state capital.

It was in the late spring of 1831 that pioneer railroaders, in search of a quicker and more convenient means of transport between Philadelphia and New York than the stage coach and canal boat, laid the old track. It is still in a fair state of preservation and gives promise of lasting another hundred years or so to remind successive generations of the struggles and early successes of the men who laid the foundation of the American civilization.

The Pioneer Camden & South Amboy railroad was chartered by the New Jersey state legislature late in 1830 to operate a combined rail and water route between Philadelphia, Camden and New York City.

No iron suitable for its trackage being available in this country, the railroad's first president, Robert L. Stevens, took ship for England to develop with London iron workers a satisfactory design.

While away idle hours on ship board, Stevens worked out an entirely new type of rail for his line, marking a distinct departure from that then in use in England and on the one of two short stretches of railroad already operating in the United States.

He discarded the old wooden rail or stone stringer plated with strap iron then in general use and designed a crude but practical conception of the T-rail which, with slight variations in shape and modernization in size and weight, is still the standard design of railroad tracks today. This rail was used by Robert Stevens for the first time anywhere in the world on the old Camden and South Amboy railroad.

The first lengths of rail for the pioneer line were received by ship from England early in 1831 and the first piece of track, five-sixths of a mile long, was laid during the summer of that year from Bordentown north, in the direction of Hightstown. Later, the line was extended to Hightstown and thence to South Amboy, reaching completion late in 1832.

Although the first cars of the Camden & Amboy railroad were pulled by horses, this pioneer line was one of the first in the country to use a steam locomotive. The "John Bull" engine, made in England, carried the first passengers by steam in the state of New Jersey over the Camden & Amboy a short distance out of Bordentown on November 12, 1831. A large party braved the uncertainties of the new means of transport, including many members of the New Jersey legislature, prominent business and professional men and society leaders.

Madame Murat, wife of Prince Murat, a nephew of Napoleon Bonaparte, who was then living in Bordentown, made the first trip, gaining the distinction of being the first woman to ride on a train hauled by a steam locomotive in New Jersey.

The "John Bull", now preserved to history in the Smithsonian Institution at Washington, was the fourth steam engine in this country to haul cars carrying passengers. The first was the "Stourbridge Lion" which made a trial trip in August, 1829, from Honesdale to Carbondale, Pa., on the Delaware & Hudson railroad; the second was the "Best Friend of Charleston," which made a short run on the Charleston & Hamburg railroad in South Carolina in November, 1930, and the third was an unnamed engine which hauled a train over the Mohawk & Hudson railroad between Albany and Schenectady, N. Y., in August, 1831, antedating the "John Bull" by three months.

During the first several years of its operation, passengers on the Camden and South Amboy route were carried in steamboats between Philadelphia and Bordentown and between South Amboy and New York. With the completion of the line between Camden and Bordentown early in 1834, the through rail route across New Jersey was opened.

It is interesting to note that in building this early railroad into South Amboy, iron rails were spiked directly to wooden cross ties for the first time in railroad history.

TAIL LIGHTS FOR HORSES

(International News Service)

WILLIMANTIC, Conn. — Headlights and tail lights for horseback riders are demanded by Harry S. Gaucher, prosecuting attorney here. Gaucher wrote to a local family—father, mother and daughter—who went riding in the cool of the evening, and the father in turn appealed to the motor vehicle department at Hartford. "We have no jurisdiction over horses," was the reply and the evening rides will be abandoned. A new state law insists that horses ridden or led must be protected by lights after dark.

BOTH LATE AT WEDDING

(International News Service)

LONDON, July 17.—Being late for one's own wedding may become fashionable if the example of two aristocratic families spreads. Prince Max Karl Joseph Maria zu Hohenlohe-Langenberg, 29, was married to Signorina Luigia Pasquero, 33, at a registrar's office. The bride was twenty minutes late. The bridegroom came half an hour late. They had rushed to England from the continent in order to marry quickly. Prince Max is head of the House of Saxe-Coburg and Gotha. The bride is a member of an old Savoy family. They will live at Mentone, where the prince has a villa.

Ask your druggist for a box of Wildunger Tee, which contains valuable mineral salts from the famous Wildunger Bad in Germany. Unless the very first box brings grateful, comforting relief, your money back.

A New York doctor while traveling in Germany was so impressed with the results thousands were securing from this great kidney and bladder activator that he brought Wildunger Tee to this country. Many American doctors now prescribe it and report that its benefits are equally surprising here.

You can get Wildunger Tee on the distinct understanding that unless it helps, your money will be refunded to you. It may be had at

City Radio Amateur Now "Looks In" On Programs

Audiences Here View Images Brought By Television Set Assembled By Boy

Jenkins Instruments Provide Thrill Of Seeing Radio Entertainers

Flitting shadows that take form on a rapidly revolving scanning disc which is connected to a simple resistance coupled radio receiver are daily bringing the images of radio entertainers into the home of a local youth whose experiments with television have proven fruitful.

The prospect of seeing faces, figures and scenes by radio and wire from great distances is indeed intriguing and Francis Hoag, young red-haired senior high student of East Falls street, was so enthusiastic when the first television experiments were announced several years ago that he began to try for himself.

He purchased several parts for a television set from the Jenkins laboratories in Washington, where Francis Jenkins, the father of the television art, is setting the pace for the new radio art among radio engineers.

Hoag's first set consisted of a maze of wires and gadgets that would confuse the average radio fan. It was assembled for the first time in November, 1929, and although an experimental set, it proved successful in receiving pictures from the pioneer television station in Washington, D. C., station W3XK.

His first set contained one 16-horsepower motor which turned the scanning disc at 900 R. P. M., which is the sending speed of W3XK. The object to be received on the television program appeared on the disc which contained 48 holes.

The receiver was a simple 2050 to 2900 K. C. resistance coupled set employing five ordinary vacuum tubes. The set operated successfully and local radio fans appeared to take great interest in its operation.

When they gathered in the Hoag home they observed the disc turning slowly at first, then gathering momentum. At first, with the introduction of a motor to turn the scanning disc, there were only black and white dots and dashes in the picture area, but when the speed of the disc has been brought into synchronism with the speed of the transmitter, the picture suddenly appeared, as one looked at the television set's lamp through the flying holes of the disc.

The pictures received by the boy's television set are in silhouette or in halftone.

Farm Wage Rate Higher In State

Pennsylvania Farm Laborers Are Well Paid, Survey Shows

WASHINGTON, D. C. July 17.—The wage rate for farm labor in Pennsylvania, although lower than in any other state of the North Atlantic section, are considerably higher than such rates for the country as a whole, according to the Department of Agriculture.

In the Keystone State farm laborers receive $30.50 a month with board or $47 without board. The respective figures for the country at large are $25.35 with board and $37 without board.

In Pennsylvania such labor receives $1.80 per day with board, or $2.45 per day without board. The daily figures for the nation are $1.80 and $2.50.

The amount of farm labor exceeds the demand in both this state and the nation. In Pennsylvania the supply of labor is 115 per cent of normal and the demand is only 77 per cent of normal. In the nation the supply is 120 per cent of normal and the demand is only 73 per cent of normal.

The Flower Parade

Written for Central Press
By DR. KARL F. KELLERMAN
Bureau of Plant Industry
U. S. Department of Agriculture

FILLING IN THE GAPS

Flower growers are frequently confronted wtih gaps in their flower beds or borders when one thing or another causes flowers to die. How to fill these gaps is a problem bothering many just now. There are three general methods of replacement, the Bureau of Plant Indusry finds.

In some cases it is possible to plant flower seeds. If the season is favorable, these will grow rapidly and provide late blooms. Among flower seeds which may be sown this way are the calendula, mignonette, gypsophila, candytuft, annual larkspur, shirley poppy, alyssum and cornflower, which will flower even now in the northern states, if we have a normal fall. A little further south a number of others may be planted.

Another method used to fill the gaps is transplanting flowers that are established in another part of the garden. Use great care in doing this, lifting the plants with a ball of soil so that the roots are disturbed as little as possible.

The safest and best replacement method for the ordinary flower gardener is to grow annuals in flower pots from seeds or small transplants. The plant with the pot should be sunk in the soil so that the top of the pot is about level with the ground. This method can be used with practically any annual and the flowers can be placed in the garden with no noticeable slowing of growth, provided the pot is large enough to care for the root system of the flower.

Many gardeners who dislike to see the effect of their plantings spoiled will find it to their advantage to keep a number of potted plants of their favorite varieties. They can then use them to fill in gaps which occur during the first part of the growing season.

Sugars, Starches, Fats Flesh Producing Foods

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M D.

"What foods are fattening?" is a question often asked me.

The answer is that all foods are fatening if you take enough of them.

But what the question means is whether there are certain foods that more easily turn into fat than others.

Fats probably correspond to this better than any other food. Fats yeild a high amount of energy—nearly twice as high as any other form of food and hence produce a great deal of excess energy. This excess is not always used up and is stored in the form of body fat. Hence, as I suggested yesterday, the easiest simple first step in a reducing diet is to eliminate butter and cream.

Sugars and starches were once supposed to be more fattening than anything else. Most nutrition experts have now abandoned this idea in favor of the greater weight- producing qualities of fat.

But still the sugars and starches have strongly fattening qualities And the simpler the form in which they are eaten the more is this likely to be the case.

All starches and sugars are reduced to a very simple sugar—glucose—before they are absorbed. This is true whether you eat them in a simple form such as orange juice or table sugar, or whether in complex molecules as in lettuce or tomatoes. But if eaten in the form of lettuce it takes a longer time for the digestion to reduce the starch to a simple form and hence the absorption rate is slower.

The glucose gets to the liver in small quantities from the vegetables and some time after digestion. In the case of sugar or candy, on the other hand they are quickly reduced and large amounts of glucose enter the liver immediately. When this happens the machinery has more on hand than it can use and apparently the excess is converted into the storage material of the body—fat.

For these reasons we conclude that the least fattening foods are the green vegetables and berries. This is true partly because in eating them they fill you up quickly and diminish the sense of hunger. Candy and meat and fats such as salad dressings have a "come on" quality that makes you eat more than you really need—a common habit after thirty-five, anyway.

WHY MUCH OF THE SOLAR HEAT DOES NOT RAISE TEMPERATURES

By Arthur DeV. Carpenter

At the north pole of the earth the sun annually pours forth its heat continuously for six months, and were it not for the snow and ice accumulated there in vast quantities that region would become very hot. But insolation (solar heat radiation) at the pole is only partially devoted to warming the waters. Much of it is engaged in melting the snow and ice, and is thus converted into latent (not apparent) heat. Consequently the rise of polar temperature is relatively small. The same law applies to the small rise of temperature in the oceans: Much of the solar heat falling on ocean surfaces is devoted to evaporation leaving the waters relatively cool.

And as soon as somebody starts something and the millions timidly fall in line, we'll hear some more about the typical American's splendid initiative.

A "good sport" is a woman who cleans up after her husband's drunk friends who would be ashamed to impose on their own wives that way.

But, come to think of it, Satan began it all by using a pretty girl to overcome sales resistance.

Former New Castle Folks At Pennsylvania Reunion In California

Dr. Thomas Griffiths, Former New Castle Boy, Writes Of Reunion

Says Former Residents Of City And County Were Well Represented

In a letter received by The News today, a glowing account of the Pennsylvania counties picnic held in Exby Park, Long Beach, Calif., is given by Dr. Thomas Griffiths, former New Castle boy, now residing in Los Angeles, who was present for the occasion.

The picnic was held July 12, 1931, and the Dutch, Welsh, Irish, English and Italians, all came with well filled baskets of food, Dr. Griffiths relates.

Lawrence county was well represented, and former residents of New Castle, of course predominated in number.

Some were there with hair as whit as snow, while others were mere youngsters, and many of them came with their small children, descendants of the former Lawrence County residents, to whom the old home residence is only known of through stories told by their parents.

Were it not for the palms and other unusual species of vegetation, and the shimmering sea nearby, the old New Castle folks would have thought they were back home, Dr. Griffiths states.

This is an annual picnic, and most of those residing in Southern California, attend every year, and are well repaid in the reminiscences that take place.

The following old New Castle folks were in attendance:

Mrs. W. C. Price, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Bonna and children; Thomas Edwards and family, including a fine grandson; Mr. and Mrs. Morgan Llewellyn and son; Mr. and Mrs. Harry Preston and son; Henry Badger and family; James Hastings and family; Mr. and Mrs. Richard Richards and family; Dr. Lenore Gageby, the two daughters of Rev. Johns former pastor of the Emanuel Baptist church; Mrs. Blanche Hanna, Mr. and Mrs. Abbot; Dr. Thomas Griffiths, brother of Mrs. W. J. Isaac and Mrs. Martha L. Thomas of New Castle.

After the dinner had been served in the grove, to which any stranger to the crowd who had formerly resided in New Castle was invited; Harry Bonna was called upon to lead in singing. He also read a beautiful poem which he had prepared for the occasion. Mrs. W. C. Price was also called upon to recite a poem in Welsh. Mrs. Lillian Henry, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Richards was honored as the chosen one for the day.

Other New Castle folks were present, Dr. Griffiths states, but he was unable to secure their names.

Only women with mathematical minds should become accountants, she said.

Back in the Old Home Town

Harking back to the carefree days of his childhood, Calvin Coolidge, thirtieth President of the United States, recently went a-visiting back to the little Vermont village of Plymouth where he was born. Here the former Chief Executive and Mrs. Coolidge are shown on the steps of Plymouth's "general store" surrounded by a group of natives. Note the sign hanging overhead which proudly proclaims that Plymouth is Coolidge's "old home town."

College Survey Shows Student Success Ratio

Pupils From Big Schools Make Better Records Than Those From Small

(International News Service)

COLUMBIA, Mo., July 17.—Students from large high schools generally make better grades in college than those from small schools, it was found by Dr. Raymond L. Garnett in a survey of the freshmen class at the University of Missouri.

He concludes that a student ranking in the highest one-third of his high school class has twice as good a chance to succeed in college as does a student in the middle third of the class, and four times as good a chance as does a student in the lowest third.

The 1929 freshmen class in the university was found to be composed of 47 per cent of the students from the upper third of high school graduating classes, 36 per cent from the middle third, and 17 per cent from the lowest third.

About 71.2 per cent of the highest third were successful in maintaining an average grade of "M," or medium, in the university. Only 31.5 per cent in the middle third, and 13.9 per cent in the lowest third succeeded in the same way.

In this exceedingly interesting analysis of the freshmen class, Dr. Garnett finds that the women, outnumbered by the men by almost two to one, make better grades and give better indication of success in maintaining an "M" average than the men.

Social factors, varying from the nationality of the student's parents to the necessity of working part time while going to school, are examined in making the report. Eighty per cent of the class are of English, Scotch, German and Irish stock, and of these the Scotch and Germen students appear more successful.

An only child Dr. Garnett indicates, does not succeed as well in the university as the student who has one or two brothers or sisters; but students from families of two, eight or nine succeed best. Students whose fathers engaged in professional or clerical work appear to have an advantage in rate success.

"Family income does not appear directly to be a factor in the success of the university students," the report states. More than one-third of the students in the class came from families with an annual income of less than $3,000, while one-fifth came from families having an income of $10,000 and above.

Dr. Garnett concludes, however, that students from families having an annual income of less than $1,500 appear to have met with the same degree of success as the students from families having an income of $10,000.

GROVE CITY, July 17—Dr. L. H. Beeler leaves August 2nd on a western tour. He will reach the coast before returning. The doctor has accepted speaking engagements at the University of Southern California, the State Teachers of California and other western states. His talks will also include visits to a number of Rotary Clubs of the cities he will visit. The doctor is head of the department of history of Grove City College.

BLAIR REUNION

The Blair reunion will be held on July 22nd at Bullion Harvest Home grounds. Members of the family are urged to attend.

GUESTS HERE

Prof. and Mrs. V. A. Green of Modesta, California are house guests of Dr. and Mrs. A. J. Calderwood. Both are graduates of the college. Green is head of the chemistry department of Modesta College. J. G. Pew head of the finance committee of Grove City College has been a local called on Dr. W. C. Kesler. He arrives in Grove City following a Pittsburgh meeting of the trustees of his committee in Pittsburgh.

ATTENDS CONFERENCE

R. G. Walters represented Grove City College at the conference of educators heid here at Pitt University on Junior College work. Walters also addressed commerce students of the university during his stay. He is head of the placement bureau at the local college.

CONSOLIDATION DELAYED

Consolidation of the schools of Grove City and Pine township which has been a subject of conversation in both districts for some months, has been held up for the time being due to the refusal of the State Council of Education to give Pine township any special appropriation at this time.

If the township were to send all their scholars to the Grove City schools, both elementary as well as high school, a 50 mill tax would be needed.

The township has 13 school houses many of them in a very deplorable condition. The township is in a financial jam. It is hoped to combine a part of their schools with those of Grove City reducing expenses.

Financial assistance was needed to accomplish this. The district will have to evolve some other plan of financing their problem.

American Sugar, Or The Lack Of It, Leads To Prison Mutiny

By PIERRE J. HUSS
International News Service Staff Correspondent

MEXICO CITY, July 17.—The harmless little white cubes of American sugar caused a near mutiny recently in historic Belem, the city prison here.

The rioting prisoners were pacified after an hour of hectic demonstration, but while the bedlam lasted the authorities had their hands full.

Until the Mexican government raised the import duty on American sugar, the 4,000 inmates of the ancient jail where once the Spanish monks paced the corridors in prayer, were given a daily portion of American cube sugar to sweeten their coffee. The imported sugar was cheaper than the brown Mexican-made "piloncillo."

The increased sugar import duties reversed the situation, consequently the economizing hand of the government reached out and "piloncillo" took the place of the American product, it pleased the prisoners least of all.

A week of scowling and muttering finally culminated in a bedlam that in noise and excitement rivalled that which occured in American penal institutions within the past year. The prisoners, offended by a daily portion of brown sugar, seized their cups of coffe, after an evening meal and spilled them upon the ground. They threw the sugar lumps at the "trustiees," who scurried for cover. Chairs, tables, mattresses and other loose objects sailed in all directions amidst a din of yelling and shouting.

The more vengeful demonstrators, apparently seeing an opportunity to punish the person responsible for the preparation of their meals and coffee, dragged the luckless chef from his kitchen and poured hot coffee down his back.

Order was finally restored and the demonstrators marched back to the cells. "Piloncillo," however, remains on the bill of fare.

Boston T Wharf Fish Industry's Unique Center

(International News Service)

BOSTON, Mass., July 17.—Little T wharf in the heart of this city's port line is the scene of a unique fishing industry.

Manned by immigrant fishermen from Southern Italy, the trade has grown in leaps and bounds during the past few years and has developed into a well organized and thoroughly modern industry.

The fishermen ply their trade among the foreign-born, their industry centering about a wide variety of sea-food from the baby octopi to the brilliantly colored red fish much to the delight of the foreign born palate.

Discussing the industry, W. D. Russo, well-known dealer in special kinds of sea-food, declared that Yankees are in too much of a rush to bother with these delectable seafoods because they have to be prepared in a special manner.

"Many of the sweetest and most tasty morsels," said Russo, "are protected by bony shells of intricate formation and have to be 'shelled' with care. In the course of a year we ship from this fish market thousands of pounds of these special seafoods to the Chinese, Jewish and Latin centers in all the large cities of the country."

When first started the fishing industry was carried on by a few depending on oars for power to operate their tiny boats but this later gave way to sails and now the work is carried on with greater speed and progress through large motorized boats.

STATE COLLEGE, Pa., July 17.—Only three of twentw-two cases of defective speech among students of Pennsylvania State College could not be corrected during the past year, Herbert Koepp-Baker, instructer in public speech reported to the college facilty here. Of the twenty-two cases, only four had to be referred to a physician, the instructor stated.

Scientists Tell Why Motors Knock

(International News Service)

PARIS, July 17.—A report on why motors knock, presented before the French academy of Science, is considered of great value to the motor industry.

Professors Dumanoir and Moncain-Monval who conducted the experiments which led to the report proved that when the heat of the walls of combustion chambers passes 270 degrees Cent., the phenomenon known as "knocking" occurs. Tests taken of the gases at that moment show that peroxides have been formed.

If the ignition is cut off the motor will continue to work for a short space of time, not as the result of self-ignition, but owing to the continued explosion of these peroxides at this high temperature. Before the motor knocks no trace of peroxide can be found.

Grasse, France, is the center of the perfume industry.

New Motor Code Makes Changes In Traffic Rulings

Amended Vehicle Code As Approved By Governor Contains Many Changes

CITIES SHOWING GREATER INTEREST

HARRISBURG, July 17. — The amended vehicle code is approved by Governor Gifford Pinchot contains a number of changes of special interest to the smaller communities of the State. Some of these were summarized today by officials of the Bureau of Motor Vehicles.

Boroughs and incorporated towns and cities now have a financial as well as a safety interest in enforcing traffic control at "Thru Highways" and "Stop" intersections within their limits. By an amendment to the code all fines, penalties and bail forfeited resulting from violation of "Thru Highways" and "Stop" signs within the limits of such divisions are now to be paid to the treasurer of the division in which the offense occurred.

Funds resulting from such fines are to be used in the construction, repair and maintenance of highways. Heretofore, such money was collected by the local authorities and turned over to the State. Other fines collected are disposed of in according with old code.

Establishment of "Thru Highways" has been extended to give that authority to counties on approval by the Secretary of Highways. Previous to the amendment such authority was given only to cities, boroughs, incorporated towns and townships of the first class.

Under the amended code, county authorities in addition to those previously authorized are permitted to designate through highways by erecting at the entrance thereto from intersecting highways signs bearing the words "Thru Traffic—Stop". The word "Stop" must be in letters at least six inches in height. The letters of the words "Thru" and "Traffic" must be of a form and size approved by the Secretary of Highways.

"Stop" Signs

Another safety measure provides for "Stop" intersections by allowing the same local authorities to designate dangerous intersections as "Stop" intersections. Such signs will be octagonal in shape. The word "Stop" must be in black letters at least six inches in height on a yellow background. Erection of "Stop" signs must have the approval of the Secretary of Highways.

Communities contemplating erection of electrically operated traffic signals should study an amendment to Section 1,110 of the code. That amendment provides that traffic signals electrically operated erected after January 1, 1932 must be of the three-color system. The red lens must be at the top or left side of the signal, the yellow lens in the center, and the green lens at the bottom or right side. Where a special green arrow is used for right or left turns it must be located below or to the right of the green lens.

Another change makes each municipal division jointly and severally liable with any member of a volunteer fire company of a city, borough or township for any damage caused by the negligence of such member while operating a motor vehicle used by or belonging to such colunteer fire company while going to, attending or returning from a fire within the municipality's limits.

Motor vehicles of the bus type operated under contract with or owned by any school district for the transportation of school children are now considered a commercial vehicle for purposes of registration. Previous to the amendment such motor vehicle was not classed as a commercial vehicle but as a motor omnibus which classification requires a higher registration fee.

Bus Drivers

In order to safeguard the lives of school children, drivers of all school buses must be at least twenty-one years of age. The same age requirement also applies to operators of buses or other motor vehicles used for the transportation of pay passengers.

The amended code also settles the question as to the proper side for an automobile operator to pass a monument, grass plot, or any other permanent structure other than a traffic device that has been set up at a highway intersection. Local authorities are empowered to direct traffic to keep to the right of such permanent structure or grass plot. They are, however, required to erect proper signs calling attention to the direction traffic must take.

Safety of workmen along the highway is provided for in another amendment. This prohibits overtaking, passing or attempting to pass another vehicle proceeding in the same direction between any points indicated by temporary warning or caution signs showing that men are at work on the highway.

Overtaking or passing on the right within business or residence districts on highways having two or more marked lanes for movement of traffic in one direction is allowed. Passing other vehicles to the left on highways having two or more marked lanes for movement of traffic in one direction when approaching the crest of a grade, upon a curve on a highway, railroad grade crossings and highway intersections is also permitted.

The hitch-hiker is ruled off the traveled portion of the highway. It is now unlawful for any person to stand on the main portion of the traveled highway for the purpose of soliciting a ride.

The activities of the parking "pest" also have been curbed. The amended code makes it unlawful for any person to stand on or near a highway for the purpose of soliciting the watching or guarding of any vehicle while parked or about to be parked.

State Motor Laws Are Strict

Pennsylvania Is One Of Leading States On Motor Regulations

By ARTHUR C. WIMER
Special Washington Correspondent Of The New Castle News

WASHINGTON, D. C. July 17.—Pennsylvania motorists are supposed to know their state's traffic laws—some of them do—but probably a comparison of Pennsylvania with other states is interesting. The American Automobile Association has just compiled a report on motor vehicle laws and the survey is entertaining.

Looking over the statutes of the various states one learns that Pennsylvania is—

One of the thirty-three states that prohibits passing on hills or curves where the view is obstructed.

One of twenty states forbiding coasting in neutral.

One of the eleven states in which it is not lawful to park on the highways.

One of thirty-nine states demanding that hand signals be used.

One of thirty-four states requiring report of accident.

One of twenty-four states which ban windshield stickers.

One of eight states in which it is unlawful to throw cigarettes from car.

MY NEW YORK

BY JAMES ASWELL

Central Press

NEW YORK, July 17—The celebrated skyline is well and good, but some, inquisitive out- of-towners prefer to pick individuals shafts for admiration. There are plenty of candidates for your choice, thumping arguments, arise from personal preferences in the matter of skyscrapers.

My own leaning is toward the Daily News Building, in 42nd St., between Second and Third Avenues. Only thirty-six stories high, it has the courage to stop abruptly, surprisingly, when its soaring is over. There are no spires, no gargoyles no filigrees. The Daily News is one of the severest, austerest buildings in the world: in its terse architectural style there is a powerful esthetic kick.

The second choice would be, I think, No. One Fifth Ave., another pile in the modern manner. This has a tower, after a series of windy terraces. No. One gives you an impression vaguely Eastern and is quite surprising, so close to the quiet old residences of Washington Square.

Then, of course, there is the Sherry-Netherland Hotel Fifth Ave. and 59th St. Nobody can deny the high-spired grace of these very swanky 43 stories. The Sherry-Netherland, is a tall goddess with a golden head-dress: or, if that is too pretentious for you—a jeweled finger pointing at the sky.

There are, to be sure, the tallest and second tallest buildings in the world, Empire State and Chrysler respectively, but both of these are too overwhelming to evoke affection—anyway at close range.

The Bush Terminal Building, cramped in a 50 by 200 foot plot—the narrowest anchorage, for its height, of any building in the world—is a thirty-story monument to the high cost of ground on Manhattan Island.

The Chanin Building ought not to lose its place in the itinerary of tourists, with the influx of newer and taller structures. 680 feet high, this shaft across the street diagonally from the Chrysler Building is equipped from cellar to roof in modernistic furnishings. It is 56 stories to that roof, by the way, and adagios are fond of doing routines for the camera atop the final square Belgian black marble, etched and silvered glass, bronze, onyx and rare woods make the interior a dazzle and a shine.

And no brief list should leave out the American Radiator Building at 40 West 40th Street—the first black building to be built in New York. Its ebony brick and gold-leaf trimmings are means to symbolize a lump of coal afire.

There is the steel jungle of others: but I have run over those which capture my hick imagination most completely. The Grand Central Terminal from the air is, finally, quite exciting.

LOOKING BACK

IN NEW CASTLE

When you speak of a Flatiron building, most people think of that famous building erected quite a number of years ago on a small and pointed piece of land at the intersection of two important streets of New York City. Yet this community has a much smaller but not the less famous structure of a similar type on South Mill street at the Southwest corner of the Mill street bridge over the Neshannock creek. Its history is quite unique as no doubt many people of the city will remember. It is located on a small triangular piece of land, which until Robert Whaley started his activities quite a number of years ago, had always been considered as a part of the adjoining Carnegie Steel company property. Mr. Whaley found through the medium of a survey of which he had knowledge, that the property line of the steel company property did not extend to the river at this point and he proceeded to take legal possession of the same. The steel company was equally active in attempting to prevent possession of the small piece of property. Injunctions were sought but possession being nine points of the law, Mr. Whaley put one over one night, when he had a group of workmen appear on the scene and erect the present small building on the disputed property. Efforts to prevent the erection of the building were made but the building was completed in record time and eventually the possession of the property was found by the courts to be properly vested in Mr. Whaley and those associated with him in the matter.

Agrarian Law In Mexico Is Under New Fire

Foes Of Measure Assail It As Cause Of Depression

By PIERRE J. HUSS
International News Service Staff Correspondent
Article No. 1.

MEXICO CITY, July 17.—Mexico's agrarian law is under fire again following a declaration in the chamber by Deputy Gonzalo Bautista of the government party that the 1930 crop represented only 28 per cent of production in 1910.

Unremittent foes of the measure immediately assailed it as the basic cause of the agricultural depression, renewing agitation for repeal of the law and the restoration of all lands to their original owners.

Without specifically admitting that the experiment had proved a failure, Deputy Gonzola Bautista urged speedy completion of the agrarian program, blaming the startling slump in agricultural production on the uncertainty of status on the part of landholders and agrarian. In other words, according to the deputy, the essential thing to do is to decide beyond doubt whether the system of communal landholding in Mexico will be retained as an inviolable part of the constitution or whether it will be resuscitated as a failure.

In reviewing the situation, he quoted production figures as supplied by the department of agriculture. These figures revealed that in 1910 the cereal production in Mexico totalled 4,705,789 tons. In 1930 the output fell to 1,324,529 tons.

Cereal production diminished year by year after 1910, the figures showed, with the biggest decline occuring from 1926 on. The latter year tons, in 1927 to 2,078,817 tons, in 1928 to 2,172,854 tons and in 1929 to 1,514,701 tons.

That the fault lay in small acreage production—in other words with the new owners of tracts acquired under the agrarian law—was indicated by the deputy's figures tracing a steady decline from 1926 in the amount of cereal kilos produced annually on each hectare or land (each 2.47 acres).

Each hectare of cereals produced 670 kilos in 1926; in 1927 the average fell to 640 kilos; in 1928 to 590 kilos, in 1929 to 517 kilos and in 1930 to 478 kilos.

The all important bean crop of Mexico totalled 336,127 tons in 1910. According to the deputy's figures, it had declined to 213,668 tons by 1926. In 1927 only 195,379 tons of beans were produced, 176,134 in 1928 and 94,805 in 1929. Production per hectare fell from 202 kilos in 1926 to 129 kilos in 1929.

Consequently Mexico was forced year by year to import wheat at high prices from the United States and Canada This situation has become more complicated with enactment restrictions in regards of foreign grain importations. Beans were shipped in by the ton from Japan.

Oldest Citizen Of U. S. In France Is A Flying Fan

(International News Service)

PARIS, July 17.—Just fifty-two years ago, Mr. Frank S. Lahm came to Paris from a little town in Northern Ohio expecting to take a rest for six months. He just celebrated his 85th birthday in the capital where he has been ever since. Mr. Lahm is undoubtedly the oldest American resident in France, both as to age and as to length of residence on French soil. He seems none the worse for it.

He has no rules to keep young, he says but has always tried to eat the right things and also sleep the necessary eight hours.

Mr. Lahm is known to all French Baloonists for he was one of the very first who ever went up in the clouds over France. He was a passenger with Wilbur Wright in November 1908, five years after the sensational flight. Mr. Lahm was then 62 years old. His most recent ascent was two years ago when he was 83.

Mr. Lahm's son, General Frank P. Lahm, was Wilbur Wright's first air pasenger in September 1908 and was also the first to win the Gordon Bennett Balloon trophy in 1906. He was the youngest man in the race and he is now the oldest aviator in the United States Army, in command of the flying center at San Antonio.

The Aero Club de France, of which Mr. Lahm is one of the original members, recently presented him with a beautiful bronze plaque of service, commemorating his membership of the Directing Committee.

STRAWBERRY YIELD BIG

(International News Service)

ALLENTOWN, Pa., July 17.—This was one of the best strawberry seasons this section has known with many large scale growers reporting banner yields. Hon. Albert E. Rinn, a former member of the State Legislature now a Squire of Saucon, near here, is one of the largest growers, and reported a highly gratifying season. Numerous strawberry clubs, formed by children from 10 to 15 years old, turned out excellent products besides giving the youngsters fine training. Many large scale growers realized more than $1,000 per acre on their strawberries whereas they had made little more than $15 per acre when growing wheat on the same land.

Christian Communism

"Brass Tacks" On The Sunday School Lesson

The Golden Text

He said, It is more blessed to give than to receive.—Acts 20:35.

By DR. ALVIN E. BELL

One comes upon the story of the communism of the early Christian church recorded in Acts 4:32-37 as upon a rare and fragrant flower in the early dawn with the freshness of the dew of heaven upon it: "And the multitude of them that believed were of one heart and of one soul; neither said any of them that aught of the things which he possessed was his own; but they had all things common. And with great power gave the apostles witness of the resurrection of the Lord Jesus: and great grace was upon them all. Neither was there any among them that lacked: for as many as were possessors of lands or houses sold them, and brought the prices of the things that were sold, and laid them down at the apostles' feet: and the distribution was made unto every man according as he had need."

A Heavenly Ideal

This heavenly ideal, it should never be forgotten, is only possible in a fellowship of faith and love such as that which gave it birth, viz., in a "multitude of them that believed and were of one heart and of one soul." These were all regenerate men and women of a common faith, a common hope and a common love, and therefore "communism" was natural and inevitable among them. Those who talk most of "communism" today utterly forget this basic fact. There can be no communism in material things without first its root and soil of communism in spiritual realities: "on heart and one soul." To attempt to put anything of the sort into practice without this essential atmosphere of spiritual harmony would be productive of chaos, and must end in failure. Atheism and communism are unthinkable companions! The communism of apostolic days was first Christian, and came as the flower of the Christian faith and hope and love. It can be reproduced only as it was produced then, by the power of the Spirit in believing souls desirous of glorifying Christ.

Christian Social Service

However, this is no excuse for passing up this heavenly ideal as thoroughly visionary and unworthy of emulation in any sense. The unselfishness of those early Christians who put the spiritualities always above the temporalities, and who had a keen social conscience that suffered with every suffering brother, points the way to better social conditions for all succeeding ages. As they cared for their poor within the fellowship, so that "there was none among them that lacked," so the spirit of unselfishness and considerateness of others, will help to ameliorate the condition of the poor today throughout the world. Christianity must bear its fruit today as then. It must point the way for the world in paths of serving love now as then. Its followers, now as then, must cease emphasizing ownership of possessions and think and act in terms of stewardship for Christ as Lord, and use these possessions for his glory and the good of those in need. The "communism" of the early church was not legislative nor compulsory, but spiritual and voluntry.

(The International Uniform Lesson for July 19 is Acts 4:32-35; 6:1-4; II Cor. 9:1-7, the subject being, "Social Service in the Early Church," and the Golden Text, Acts 20:35, "He said, It is more blessed to give than to receive.")

Sports Bag Like Binocular Case, Selling In Paris

(International News Service)

Midsummer odds and ends seen in smart Paris shops include the sports bag that is made like a binocular case, and is slung from the shoulder. It comes in all kinds of fine leathers with metal clasps.

The bag for more habille occasions comes in satin or soft brocade with very simple frames. Smartly new are georgette evening bags to match the color of one's frock, with the envelope flap closing held shut by a band of pearl beads that encircles the bag.

A bag in a fabric resembling straw is being used for ensembles, with the hat matching. It has metal springs for the handle.

Belt and necklace novelties come in matching leather. A belt in brown deerskin with punchwork and narrow strips of kid also used on the steel buckles, has matching necklace with antelope tassels. Another set is in green octopus-skin and black patent.

In metal lines, there are sets of nickel and a necklace, earrings, belt buckle and bracelet come in silver and jet.

Looking ahead to a cold winter, one of the prominent glove-shops is showing cold resisting hand-covering for zero weather. It has a sectional cuff which is banded tightly into the wrist.

Autos Must Carry Two Red Lanterns

(International News Service)

MEXICO CITY, July 17.—Two red lanterns in addition to regulation car lights must be carried by motorists who travel on Mexican highways at night, according to a decree issued by the Department of Communications.

These lanterns are to be placed five yards in front and five yards in the rear of every car when the driver is forced to stop on a federal highway at night. Head and tail-lights must also be kept on. Violation means a fine of $25.

In connection with these precautionary measures, it was pointed out that 14,000 persons have been killed in automobile accidents in Mexico and its vicinity in twenty years.

FRIGHT IS BLAMED FOR MAN'S DEATH

WARREN, Pa., July 17.—Apoplexy superinduced by fright and overexertion was given by physicians as the probable cause of the death of Frank M. Stanton, 60, of Clarendon, who was caught beneath a small truck, in which he had been riding, when it rolled over a 5-foot embankment while the man was attempting to keep it from tipping over. Stanton's machine had been parked along the Roosevelt highway, about four miles west of here, when the edge of the bank gave way, permitting the car to roll over.

These overhead lines will be connected by a large concourse, 130 by 300 feet. The elevation of these lines is expected to be completed by the end of 1933, when the elevated system will be put into operation. The main building will be completed by the end of 1935. City Radio Amateur Now "Looks In" On Programs

Jenkins Instruments Provide Thrill Of Seeing Radio Entertainers

Flitting shadows that take form on a rapidly revolving scanning disc which is connected to a simple resistance coupled radio receiver are daily bringing the images of radio entertainers into the home of a local youth whose experiments with television have proven fruitful.

The prospect of seeing faces, figures and scenes by radio and wire from great distances is indeed intriguing and Francis Hoag, young red-haired senior high student of East Falls street, was so enthusiastic when the first television experiments were announced several years ago that he began to try for himself.

He purchased several parts for a television set from the Jenkins laboratories in Washington, where Francis Jenkins, the father of the television art, is setting the pace for the new radio art among radio engineers.

Hoag's first set consisted of a maze of wires and gadgets that would confuse the average radio fan. It was assembled for the first time in November, 1929, and although an experimental set, it proved successful in receiving pictures from the pioneer television station in Washington, D. C., station W3XK.

His first set contained one 16-horsepower motor which turned the scanning disc at 900 R. P. M., which is the sending speed of W3XK. The object to be received on the television program appeared on the disc, which contained 48 holes.

The receiver was a simple 2050 to 2900 K. C. resistance coupled set employing five ordinary vacuum tubes. The set operated successfully and local radio fans appeared to take great interest in its operation.

When they gathered in the Hoag home they observed the disc turning slowly at first, then gathering momentum. At first, with the introduction of a motor to turn the scanning disc, there were only black and white dots and dashes in the picture area, but when the speed of the disc has been brought into synchronism with the speed of the transmitter, the picture suddenly appeared, as one looked at the television set's lamp through the flying holes of the disc.

The pictures received by the boy's television set are in silhouette or in halftone.

Farm Wage Rate Higher In State

Pennsylvania Farm Laborers Are Well Paid, Survey Shows

WASHINGTON, D. C. July 17.—The wage rate for farm labor in Pennsylvania, although lower than in any other state of the North Atlantic section, are considerably higher than such rates for the country as a whole, according to the Department of Agriculture.

In the Keystone State farm laborers receive $30.50 a month with board or $47 without board. The respective figures for the country at large are $25.35 with board and $37 without board.

In Pennsylvania such labor receives $1.80 per day with board, or $2.45 per day without board. The daily figures for the nation are $1.80 and $2.50.

The amount of farm labor exceeds the demand in both this state and the nation. In Pennsylvania the supply of labor is 115 per cent of normal and the demand is only 77 per cent of normal. In the nation the supply is 120 per cent of normal and the demand is only 73 per cent of normal.

The Flower Parade

Written for Central Press
By DR. KARL F. KELLERMAN
Bureau of Plant Industry
U. S. Department of Agriculture

FILLING IN THE GAPS

Flower growers are frequently confronted wtih gaps in their flower beds or borders when one thing or another causes flowers to die. How to fill these gaps is a problem bothering many just now. There are three general methods of replacement, the Bureau of Plant Industry finds.

In some cases it is possible to plant flower seeds. If the season is favorable, these will grow rapidly and provide late blooms. Among flower seeds which may be sown this way are the calendula, mignonette, gypsophila, candytuft, annual larkspur, shirley poppy, alyssum and cornflower, which will flower even now in the northern states, if we have a normal fall. A little further south a number of others may be planted.

Another method used to fill the gaps is transplanting flowers that are established in another part of the garden. Use great care in doing this, lifting the plants with a ball of soil so that the roots are disturbed as little as possible.

The safest and best replacement method for the ordinary flower gardener is to grow annuals in flower pots from seeds or small transplants. The plant with the pot should be sunk in the soil so that the top of the pot is about level with the ground. This method can be used with practically any annual and the flowers can be placed in the garden with no noticeable slowing of growth, provided the pot is large enough to care for the root system of the flower.

Many gardeners who dislike to see the effect of their plantings spoiled will find it to their advantage to keep a number of potted plants of their favorite varieties. They can then use them to fill in gaps which occur during the first part of the growing season.

Sugars, Starches, Fats Flesh Producing Foods

By LOGAN CLENDENING, M D.

"What foods are fattening?" is a question often asked me.

The answer is that all foods are fatening if you take enough of them.

But what the question means is whether there are certain foods that more easily turn into fat than others.

Fats probably correspond to this better than any other food. Fats yeild a high amount of energy—nearly twice as high as any other form of food and hence produce a great deal of excess energy. This excess is not always used up and is stored in the form of body fat. Hence, as I suggested yesterday, the easiest simple first step in a reducing diet is to eliminate butter and cream.

Sugars and starches were once supposed to be more fattening than anything else. Most nutrition experts have now abandoned this idea in favor of the greater weight-producing qualities of fat.

But still the sugars and starches have strongly fattening qualities And the simpler the form in which they are eaten the more is this likely to be the case.

All starches and sugars are reduced to a very simple sugar—glucose—before they are absorbed. This is true whether you eat them in a simple form such as orange juice or table sugar, or whether in complex molecules as in lettuce or tomatoes. But if eaten in the form of lettuce it takes a longer time for the digestion to reduce the starch to a simple form and hence the absorption rate is slower.

The glucose gets to the liver in small quantities from the vegetables and some time after digestion. In the case of sugar or candy, on the other hand they are quickly reduced and large amounts of glucose enter the liver immediately. When this happens the machinery has more on hand than it can use and apparently the excess is converted into the storage material of the body—fat.

For these reasons we conclude that the least fattening foods are the green vegetables and berries. This is true partly because in eating them they fill you up quickly and diminish the sense of hunger. Candy and meat and fats such as salad dressings have a "come on" quality that makes you eat more than you really need—a common habit after thirty-five, anyway.

WHY MUCH OF THE SOLAR HEAT DOES NOT RAISE TEMPERATURES

By Arthur DeV. Carpenter

At the north pole of the earth the sun annually pours forth its heat continuously for six months, and were it not for the snow and ice accumulated there in vast quantities that region would become very hot. But insolation (solar heat radiation) at the pole is only partially devoted to warming the waters. Much of it is engaged in melting the snow and ice, and is thus converted into latent (not apparent) heat. Consequently the rise of polar temperature is relatively small. The same law applies to the small rise of temperature in the oceans: Much of the solar heat falling on ocean surfaces is devoted to evaporation leaving the waters relatively cool.

And as soon as somebody starts something and the millions timidly fall in line, we'll hear some more about the typical American's splendid initiative.

A "good sport" is a woman who cleans up after her husband's drunk friends who would be ashamed to impose on their own wives that way.

But, come to think of it, Satan began it all by using a pretty girl to overcome sales resistance.

Blaine's Attack On Universities Stirs Interest

Says Schools Meet Demand Of Materialistic Philosophy

(International News Service)

VALPARASIO, Ind., July 17.—Much interest has been aroused by the stand taken here by United States Senator John J. Blaine in the commencement address at Valparasio university.

Colleges and universities have been meeting the demands of a materialistic philosophy, he said, and in most instances the schools, scientists, technicians and skilled artisans have been helpless to do otherwise.

Chemists who will work out a formula for a subtle though efficient, death dealing gas, and engineers who can design an instrument of dstruction, are products of these institutions, Senator Blaine declared.

"Great corporations," he said further, "not satisfied with production, but keeping an eye on finance, seek specialized talent that can tell the corporations how to split shares and inflate the stock market when those shares are for sale to the public, and deflate the stock market when the insider desires his lust for more gold.

"With a selfish, sordid, economic complex, we are even without a philosophy of government. As a man on the street the other day put it, we have no government at all; we have a set of laws, executives, legislators and judges. They may settle the individual or tribal differences and cling to the gestures borne out of the past. But to the social, economic and political problems, they are as dumb and inert as the stranded oyster on a summer's day. The obvious they do not recognize.

"Even the basic principles of sound political economy are unheeded. We adopt a tariff policy which no reputable and honest economist would approve, and then seek to correct its injustices through a system of so-called farm relief that does not relieve.

"The call to the colleges and universities is to bring to the service of the state a social and political viewpoint so that 57 men may not run the government and political parties may not continue to be the weak puppets of an intrenched system of privilege."

COURT RUN AT LOSS

(International News Service)

MIDDLETOWN, Conn.—A small claims court was established for Middletown by the state legislature effective May 1, last. In that month the court took in exactly $4.50 and spent 60 cents for postage. The judge gets $2,000 a year, or as someone figured, $91 a month. Therefore the court lost $87 in the single month.

Evict Your Man If You Can, Sheriff!

This war-like scene brings memories of France to mind, but the locale is in far-away Australia. Still, the sandbags and barbed wire entanglements indicate some sort of a war—and there is one in this particular sector of Sydney. The determined looking group of men, many of them ex-soldiers, is guarding the home of an unemployed worker of Sydney who has been threatened with eviction by the sheriff because his rent is in arrears. If the sheriff can go over the top of those solid-looking sandbags and untangle himself from that prickly looking wire he'll be going some!

Capt. Hawks Has Cure For Insomnia

(International News Service)

NEW YORK, July 17.—If you suffer from insomnia and want a sure cure, follow Capt. Frank H. Hawks' advice: "Fly at a height of 21,000 feet over the Alps."

In fact, it is very easy to obtain permanent slumber, he intimates.

He described his own experiences at that height in an address given in New York:

"You get kind of sleepy," he said, and the slightest exertion makes your heart pump like everything. You get dizzy. I had to reach down in the cabin to turn a couple of valves and the effort made things look black for a minute. I could see those St. Bernards, with their little rum casks, yapping all around the mountains looking for me."

Muskrat Becomes Pest In Europe

(International News Service)

PARIS, July 17.—If the United States blames the Europeans for the introduction into their country of the little sparrow which ruins their corn, the latter also have a little score to settle. The New World sent the Old one the muskrat, or, more precisely, the Old World sent over for the little animal to raise for furs. She has learned her lesson, however.

This variety of rat has become a veritable pest in Bohemia, Germany, France and other countries. Accustomed to the great open spaces in America where it may come and go at will, it has been doing the same thing in Europe which is far more populated. A big mistake was made when it was allowed to run free.

Because of great damage done to river and canal banks, etc., war has been declared upon the muskrat. Within the past year, 19,000 of the animals were killed in Bavaria alone.

TREATING POISON IVY

(International News Service)

CHICAGO, July 17.—Poison ivy sufferers are offered two scientific treatments by Dr. J. B. McNair, of the Field Museum. The first is to wash the oil of the ivy plant off the infected parts with ether, chloroform, or strong soap. This is to be followed by soaking cotton in a five per cent solution of ferric chloride added to a fifty-fifty solution of water and alcohol and applying to the infected parts with bandages.

Rivals Strength Nearly Tied In Struggle For Speakership Recalls Historic Deadlocks

By WILLIAM S. NEAL
International News Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, July 17.—Historic struggles of the past in the election of a speaker of the House of Representatives may be reenacted when members of that body gather on the first Monday in December.

Already politicians are mapping out their campaigns and expert parliamentarians are digging into musty volumes of the past for precedents to serve in the wrangles certain to occur.

A search of the records has disclosed at least four major, protracted, struggles over the speakership, during which legislation could not be enacted.

With the House members-elect now divided, 216 Republicans, 214 Democrats, one Farmer-Laborite and four vacancies, paper strength may show either a Republican or a Democratic majority in December.

With records disclosing that in the major contests of the past there always were some members absent, due to illness, and because of the uncertainty of the vote of the progressives, a paper majority may mean nothing.

When the new house convenes Clark William Tyler Page will become its "boss." He is charged with calling the House to order and preserving it, and of calling for nominations and taking the vote for speaker.

The four major contests of the past have developed many precedents which will be followed in December.

For example, in 1856 the members-elect decided that before the election of a speaker they would have the meeting opened with prayer. This precedent has been followed ever since that time.

The first protracted contest occurred in the 26th Congress in 1839. The chief difficulty confronting the members was the fact that five of the six New Jersey seats were in question. Two sets of credentials were presented.

For three days nothing was done, and then John Quincy Adams was named chairman of the meeting. The New Jersey votes were set aside. Eleven ballots were necessary to elect a speaker. Robert M. Hunter of Virginia being chosen on the 11th ballot.

In the 34th Congress, 1855-56, Nathaniel P. Banks, Jr., of Massachusetts was elected speaker on the 133rd ballot, the longest contest on record. It lasted from Dec. 3, 1855 to Feb. 2, 1856. While the rule is that a majority of those present must vote for the successful candidate, it was necessary to change the rule in this case, electing the man with a plurality. This later was confirmed by majority vote.

Another contest was staged in the 36th Congress, 1859-1860. On the first ballot Thomas B. Bocock of Virginia led, with John Sherman of Ohio second. The slavery question was brought up before the vote for speaker. On the 44th ballot William Pennington of New Jersey was named speaker.

This settlement of the deadlock was unique, for Pennington was serving his first term in the House. He emerged as a "dark horse" in the balloting.

A spirited contest was waged in the 68th Congress in 1923, when Frederick H. Gillett was named speaker. On the first ballot he received 197 votes to 195 for Finis Garrett of Tennessee, Democrat; 17 for Henry Allen Cooper, Wisconsin progressive, and five for Martin Madden, Republican.

The Wisconsin progressives held the balance of power, and it was not until the regular Republican capitulated and liberalized the rules that they voted for Gillett. On the final vote but 418 members were present out of a total membership of 435, and but 414 were in the chamber when the voting began. The contest lasted three days.

Much of the uncertainty of the early day contests may be removed by caucuses before the session. There still remains the question of what the progressives will do.

The precedents disclose that the Senates has not usually proceeded to legislative business before the House organized. A long contest in the House next December, thus may disorganize the whole legislative program.

New Motor Code Makes Changes In Traffic Rulings

Amended Vehicle Code As Approved By Governor Contains Many Changes

CITIES SHOWING GREATER INTEREST

HARRISBURG, July 17. — The amended vehicle code is approved by Governor Gifford Pinchot contains a number of changes of special interest to the smaller communities of the State. Some of these were summarized today by officials of the Bureau of Motor Vehicles.

Boroughs and incorporated towns and cities now have a financial as well as a safety interest in enforcing traffic control at "Thru Highways" and "Stop" intersections within their limits. By an amendment to the code all fines, penalties and bail forfeited resulting from violation of "Thru Highways" and "Stop" signs within the limits of such divisions are now to be paid to the treasurer of the division in which the offense occurred.

Funds resulting from such fines are to be used in the construction, repair and maintenance of highways. Heretofore, such money was collected by the local authorities and turned over to the State. Other fines collected are disposed of in according with old code.

Establishment of "Thru Highways" has been extended to give that authority to counties on approval by the Secretary of Highways. Previous to the amendment such authority was given only to cities, boroughs, incorporated towns and townships of the first class.

Under the amended code, county authorities in addition to those previously authorized are permitted to designate through highways by erecting at the entrance thereto from intersecting highways signs bearing the words "Thru Traffic—Stop". The word "Stop" must be in letters at least six inches in height. The letters of the words "Thru" and "Traffic" must be of a form and size approved by the Secretary of Highways.

"Stop" Signs

Another safety measure provides for "Stop" intersections by allowing the same local authorities to designate dangerous intersections as "Stop" intersections. Such signs will be octagonal in shape. The word "Stop" must be in black letters at least six inches in height on a yellow background. Erection of "Stop" signs must have the approval of the Secretary of Highways.

Communities contemplating erection of electrically operated traffic signals should study an amendment to Section 1,110 of the code. That amendment provides that traffic signals electrically operated erected after January 1, 1932 must be of the three-color system. The red lens must be at the top or left side of the signal, the yellow lens in the center, and the green lens at the bottom or right side. Where a special green arrow is used for right or left turns it must be located below or to the right of the green lens.

Another change makes each municipal division jointly and severally liable with any member of a volunteer fire company of a city, borough or township for any damage caused by the negligence of such member while operating a motor vehicle used by or belonging to such colunteer fire company while going to, attending or returning from a fire within the municipality's limits.

Motor vehicles of the bus type operated under contract with or owned by any school district for the transportation of school children are now considered a commercial vehicle for purposes of registration. Previous to the amendment such motor vehicle was not classed as a commercial vehicle but as a motor omnibus which classification requires a higher registration fee.

Bus Drivers

In order to safeguard the lives of school children, drivers of all school buses must be at least twenty-one years of age. The same age requirement also applies to operators of buses or other motor vehicles used for the transportation of pay passengers.

The amended code also settles the question as to the proper side for an automobile operator to pass a monument, grass plot, or any other permanent structure other than a traffic device that has been set up at a highway intersection. Local authorities are empowered to direct traffic to keep to the right of such permanent structure or grass plot. They are, however, required to erect proper signs calling attention to the direction traffic must take.

Safety of workmen along the highway is provided for in another amendment. This prohibits overtaking, passing or attempting to pass another vehicle proceeding in the same direction between any points indicated by temporary warning or caution signs showing that men are at work on the highway.

Overtaking or passing on the right within business or residence districts on highways having two or more marked lanes for movement of traffic in one direction is allowed. Passing other vehicles to the left on highways having two or more marked lanes for movement of traffic in one direction when approaching the crest of a grade, upon a curve on a highway, railroad grade crossings and highway intersections is also permitted.

The hitch-hiker is ruled off the traveled portion of the highway. It is now unlawful for any person to stand on the main portion of the traveled highway for the purpose of soliciting a ride.

The activities of the parking "pest" also have been curbed. The amended code makes it unlawful for any person to stand on or near a highway for the purpose of soliciting the watching or guarding of any vehicle while parked or about to be parked.

State Motor Laws Are Strict

Pennsylvania Is One Of Leading States On Motor Regulations

By ARTHUR C. WIMER
Special Washington Correspondent Of The New Castle News

WASHINGTON, D. C. July 17.—Pennsylvania motorists are supposed to know their state's traffic laws—some of them do—but probably a comparison of Pennsylvania with other states is interesting. The American Automobile Association has just compiled a report on motor vehicle laws and the survey is entertaining.

Looking over the statutes of the various states one learns that Pennsylvania is—

One of the thirty-three states that prohibits passing on hills or curves where the view is obstructed.

One of twenty states forbidding coasting in neutral.

One of the eleven states in which it is not lawful to park on the highways.

One of thirty-nine states demanding that hand signals be used.

One of twenty states demanding full stop at railroad crossings.

One of thirty-four states requiring report of accident.

One of twenty-four states which ban windshield stickers.

One of eight states in which it is unlawful to throw cigarettes from car.

It appears that more persons have been killed celebrating Independence than winning it.—The Fort Wayne News-Sentinel.

His subject for the morning address, which will be in Welsh, will be "Making Things Over" and at the evening service, which will be in English, he will speak on "The Ultimate Discovery."

LOOKING BACK

IN NEW CASTLE

When you speak of a Flatiron building, most people think of that famous building erected quite a number of years ago on a small and pointed piece of land at the intersection of two important streets of New York City. Yet this community has a much smaller but not the less famous structure of a similar type on South Mill street at the Southwest corner of the Mill street bridge over the Neshannock creek. Its history is quite unique as no doubt many people of the city will remember. It is located on a small triangular piece of land, which until Robert Whaley started his activities quite a number of years ago, had always been considered as a part of the adjoining Carnegie Steel company property. Mr. Whaley found through the medium of a survey of which he had knowledge, that the property line of the steel company property did not extend to the river at this point and he proceeded to take legal possession of the same. The steel company was equally active in attempting to prevent possession of the small piece of property. Injunctions were sought but possession being nine points of the law, Mr. Whaley put one over one night, when he had a group of workmen appear on the scene and erect the present small building on the disputed property. Efforts to prevent the erection of the building were made but the building was completed in record time and eventually the possession of the property was found by the courts to be properly vested in Mr. Whaley and those associated with him in the matter.

MY NEW YORK

BY JAMES ASWELL

Central Press

NEW YORK, July 17—The celebrated skyline is well and good, but some, inquisitive out- of-towners prefer to pick individuals shafts for admiration. There are plenty of candidates for your choice, thumping arguments, arise from personal preferences in the matter of skyscrapers.

My own leaning is toward the Daily News Building, in 42nd St., between Second and Third Avenues. Only thirty-six stories high, it has the courage to stop abruptly, surprisingly, when its soaring is over. There are no spires, no gargoyles no filigrees. The Daily News is one of the severest, austerest buildings in the world: in its terse architectural style there is a powerful esthetic kick.

The second choice would be, I think, No. One Fifth Ave., another pile in the modern manner. This has a tower, after a series of windy terraces. No. One gives you an impression vaguely Eastern and is quite surprising, so close to the quiet old residences of Washington Square.

Then, of course, there is the Sherry-Netherland Hotel Fifth Ave. and 59th St. Nobody can deny the high-spired grace of these very swanky 43 stories. The Sherry-Netherland, is a tall goddess with a golden head-dress: or, if that is too pretentious for you—a jeweled finger pointing at the sky.

There are, to be sure, the tallest and second tallest buildings in the world, Empire State and Chrysler respectively, but both of these are too overwhelming to evoke affection—anyway at close range.

The Bush Terminal Building, cramped in a 50 by 200 foot plot—the narrowest anchorage, for its height, of any building in the world—is a thirty-story monument to the high cost of ground on Manhattan Island.

The Chanin Building ought not to lose its place in the itinerary of tourists, with the influx of newer and taller structures. 680 feet high, this shaft across the street diagonally from the Chrysler Building is equipped from cellar to roof in modernistic furnishings. It is 56 stories to that roof, by the way, and adagios are fond of doing routines for the camera atop the final square. Belgian black marble, etched and silvered glass, bronze, onyx and rare woods make the interior a dazzle and a shine.

And no brief list should leave out the American Radiator Building at 40 West 40th Street—the first black building to be built in New York. Its ebony brick and gold-leaf trimmings are means to symbolize a lump of coal afire.

There is the steel jungle of others: but I have run over those which capture my hick imagination most completely. The Grand Central Terminal from the air is, finally, quite exciting.

Training Child To Care For Pets Is Problem

By GARRY C. MYERS, PH. D.
Head Division Parental Education, Cleveland College, Western Reserve University.

Your Jim is eight. He always has wanted a dog.

One day a hungry, ugly-looking cur follows Jim and makes friends with him. Jim brings him home, finds a rope with which he holds the dog, and feeds the little beggar.

Jim is all excited. He sees his dreams come true. Here is a dog at last.

You have a serious problem facing you. You are glad the boy has been kind and tender toward the stray animal, but you don't know anything about it nor do you want to have the dog around. You may just have no place or means by which the animal can be properly cared for.

If you are very sure you cannot have the dog "adopted" 'you have the task of persuading the child to give it up. In that event, the honest promise of a more desirable dog or of something else, may help you succeed. You do not wish merely to turn the poor dog away. You can get in touch with the Humane society of your neighborhood or city, who will properly dispose of it.

Before another pet is promised, or the child given permission to keep this dog, you will be sure in your own mind that Jim will care for the pet continuously.

Of course, he will promise you in all good faith to care for it. But you must first know whether he will be able on his own accord or with your guidance, to assume all responsibility for it. Certainly he will feed this precious pet with great kindness for a few days, and even may bathe it a few times. But once the novelty has worn off what will happen?

You and I know very well that, perhaps, only one child out of twenty really takes complete responsibility for the pet he is old enough to care for properly. The pet's care falls to the mother or some other members of the household. All the while the child may be scolded often every day for his negligence. For a child of eight or older to have a pet he does not learn regularly to care for without being reminded or hounded to do so, is a moral loss.

Suppose that Jim's tearful promises and pleadings had persuaded you to let him keep the stray dog or to get him another one; and suppose after two days he began to neglect it. It is not enough merely to dispose of the dog then. Jim volunteered to stand by a program. He was taken at his word. Now he must be held to it for several weeks at least. Set a future date, say a month, up to which time he must care for that dog, following a strict program. Let Jim Learn, for instance, that when the dog misses a meal he must miss one also. Don't talk; act. Be exacting. Jim's character is at stake.

Students Of 3 Nations Hold 2nd Conference

(International News Service)

ANN ARBOR, Mich., July 17.—The British and American Students Conference on International Affairs, which, starting here on July 12, will run to July 19, is attracting wide attention. This is the second to be held. The first took place in 1929 at Oxford University, England.

An important part of the work of the Division of Intercourse and Education of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, is the formation and upkeep of International Relations Clubs among undergraduates in the colleges and universities of the United States and Europe. It is from these clubs in the United States and Canada and from the British Universities League of Nations Societies, that the Endowment has chosen the fifty-five students gathered for the Ann Arbor Conference. Miss Amy Heminway Jones, of the Endowment, has charge of the International Relations Clubs in the United States, and is chairman of the Conference.

Twenty-seven British students are listed: four from Canada and twenty-four from the United States.

The purpose of the conference, as set forth by the Endowment, is to "bring together students from various parts of the British Empire and the United States to discuss problems of such vital international interest as those chosen for consideration in the three Commissions upon which the program is based."

These Commissions are: First, "What Follows the Pact of Paris?"; second, "Limitation of Armaments,"; and third, "International Regional Organizations."

Women Flyers Aim To Win New Laurels At National Air Meet

By G. EVERETT DOYING
International News Service Staff Correspondent

CLEVELAND, July 17.—Women flyers will take a more prominent part in the 1931 National Air Races to be staged her Aug. 29 to Sept. 7 than ever before. They are entering in large numbers, competing in more events and seeking to show the world what feminine interest has done to, and for aviation.

They are entering the numeroue events in perfect seriousness and with but one aim. That aim is to win new laurels by breaking records, at the same time furnishing spine-chills to several thousand spectators with their daring feats.

Many new faces, a majority of them eager and flushed with recent successes, will be seen among this galaxy of aviatresses. The nucleus of this woman's flying armada, however, will be built around old faces—not old in years, but in experience.

One of the most interesting of the newer contestants in this year's events is Dorothy Hester, 19-year-old Portland, Ore., girl-flyer. Two years ago she made parachute jumps at public gatherings to earn money for flying lessons. Tex Ranklin, internationally-known pilot, took her as a protege. Last May she set a woman's record of 62 outside loops in succession, the most difficult stunt in the game. Rankin holds the men's world record of 78.

Ruth Nichols, the Rye, N. Y., society aviatrix who crashed when she started a non-stop solo flight across the Atlantic recently, is expected to attempt to better her present women's speed record of 210 miles an hour at the National Air Races.

Two well-known women pilots, both mothers of small children, already have announced their intention of entering the free-for-all derby from California to Cleveland. Mrs. Louis McPhetridge Thaden, first in the heavy plane division in 1929, will leave her eight-months-old baby in Pittsburgh to compete.

The other entrant will be Mrs. Gladys O'Donnell of Long Beach, Calif., mother of two children, and winner in the light plane event last year.

Mrs. Florence Lowe Barnes of Santa Marino, Calif., has announced a "mystery ship" will be ready for her by the time of the races and she will attempt to win Ruth Nichols' speed laurels. Some of the other women pilots expected to be present are Amelia Earhart Putnam, Elinor Smith, Betty Lund, Thea Rasche, Mrs. Keith-Miller and Jean LaRene and others.

Nine events are on the Air Races schedule exclusively for women pilots this year. In addition to these, daily parachute jumping and "dead stick" landing contests for women are scheduled.

Playing hostess to this galaxy of women flyers will be Cleveland's leading aviatrix who also will participate in the races. She is Mrs. Blanche Wilcox Noyes, one of the first women in the country to be assigned to pilot an autogiro. She also holds a transport license.

Miss Louise Vamos, co-pilot on the Pennsylvania good-will tour last summer and a native Clevelander, will act as Mrs. Noyes' aide as hostess besides competing in the cross-country event.

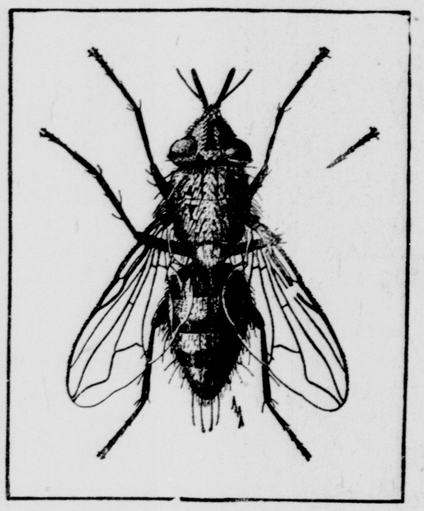
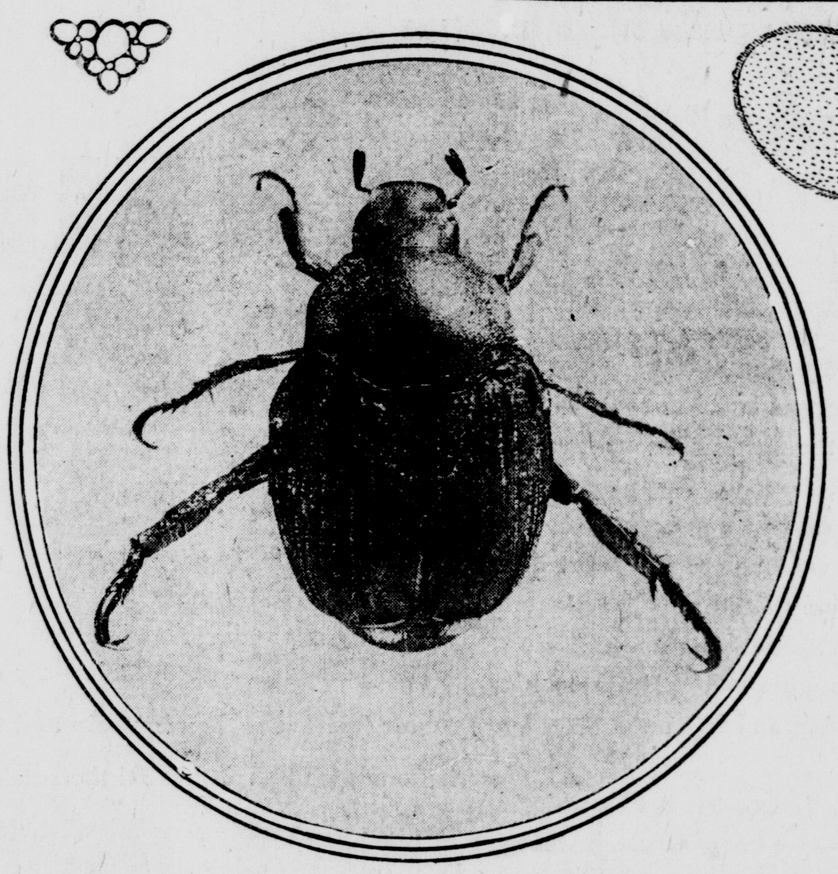
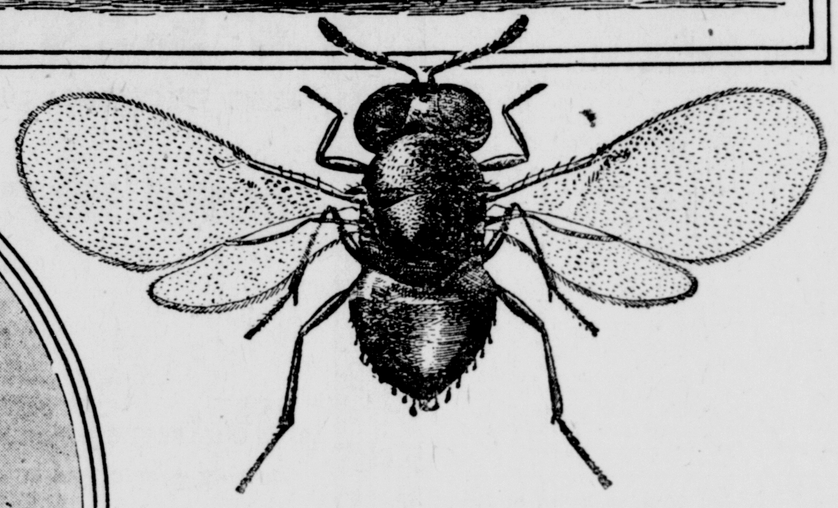
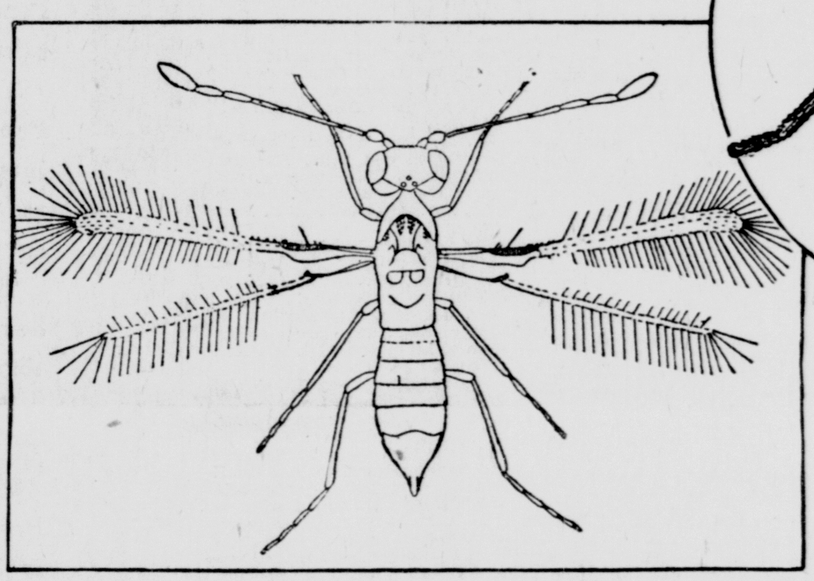
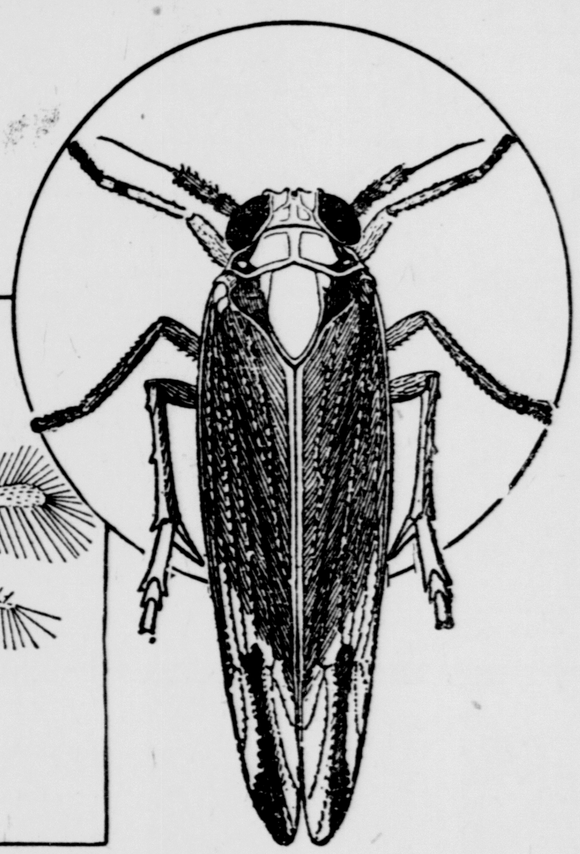
Controlling the Insect Population











The Japanese beetle, many times enlarged. Above the centeter cinera, or tashinid fly, a bitter enemy of the Japanese beetle.

At the top of the page is the insect that saved the silk industry of Italy. Directly below it is the schedius kurvanae, Japanese enemy of the devastating gypsy moth of New England.

The sugar cane leaf hopper, which in 1903 damaged the sugar cane crop of Hawaii to the extent of $3,000,000. At the left is the Paranagrus optabilis, which knocked it out of the running within three years. Upper right, grub of the Japanese beetle.

Science Successfully Fights Pest With Parasite

THE story of the fight against the Japanese beetle is as entrancing as the history of a military campaign. The idea of stamping out the pest has long since been given up. The Japanese beetle will exist, in all probability, in the United States to the end of time. What is hoped to do, however, is to colonize so many of the insect's enemies that the beetle will no longer be a menace. It is a fight of bug against bug.

Introduction Accidental.

When the grubs of the Japanese beetle were accidentally introduced into Burlington county, New Jersey, in a nursery importation in the years prior to 1916, they found none of their hereditary enemies which feed upon them in their native Japan. For once in the millions of years of their existence, every grub became a beetle instead of maybe five or ten out of a hundred. The beetle had come to the United States, but not its enemies. The perfect balance in nature, which forbids one kind of bug to become unduly numerous, was removed. There are many, many bugs which would become obnoxious under these circumstances. In experiments performed in Washington some years ago, it was found that from 95 to 97 native caterpillars out of a hundred were killed by parasites.

When the Japanese beetle became firmly established here, the government scientists saw that the only way to combat it was to import from Japan the parasite which attack and keep it under control in that country. In Japan bean beetle, as it is called there, is not considered a pest.

Numerous enemies of the bettle were discovered and catalogued and literally tons of grubs and bugs shipped to the United States. Some were unable to stand the climate and died, while others thrived and increased in ever-greater profusion. Then, too, before any of the creatures could be released to feed upon the beetle, it had to be determined beyond a shadow of a doubt that they would not be equal or greater pests than the beetles themselves.

Looks Like House Fly.

The chief foe or parasite of the beetle was found to be a little insect known to scientists as the centeter cinera, a fly belonging to the Tashnid group of insects. This creature, somewhat smaller than the ordinary type of house fly and with minute grayish stripes running horizontally along its body, is responsible for the death of 50 per cent of the Japanese beetles in its native home. The fly lays a number of little whiteish eggs just behind the head of the beetle. In a short while they hatch, and the tiny baby grubs enter the body of the host and immediately begin filling their stomachs with Japanese beetle meat. The pest becomes sick and enters the ground, dying in six days from the time the fly laid the eggs upon its body. The baby centeter cinera does not die, however, but spins itself a cocoon and awaits the coming of Spring within the dead dead body of the Japanese beetle. Then it emerges as a fly and lays its eggs upon more of the pests. How many Japanese beetles a healthy egg-laying centeter can get rid of in a Summer can scarcely be computed. Experiments have shown that this fly, for some unknown reason, confines its egg-laying mostly to female beeties, and so is doubly destructive.

Parasites Thrive.

The grubs of this centeter cinera were shipped to the United States and thrived amazingly. Great hopes for the control of the Japanese beetle center in this insignificant-looking centeter cinera.

Another insect, similar in appearance, which is responsible for the death of 12 per cent of the Japanese beetles in Japan, is the prosena siberita or dixiid fly. It, too, resembles the familiar house pest but is larger. This insect attacks the grubs, and not the beetles themselves, as is the case with the centeter cinera. When springtime comes, it lays from 600 to 700 eggs upon the ground. These hatch in a little while and, directed by the sense of smell, burrow down into the ground and scent out the grubs of the Japanese beetle. They attach themselves to the trachea or breathing tube of the developing insect and immediately begin to deprive it of a part of its necessary air. After a few weeks the prosena siberita grows so large and needs so much oxygen that its host dies entirely. It then forms a cocoon inside of the dead grub of the Japanese beetle and hibernates until the following Spring. This parasite has also been found to thrive very well in the United States.

Wasp From Korea.

A third parasite to which the scientists are pinning a good deal of hope is a small Korean (diosena dixiid) wasp, with a small and dark but business-looking kind of body. This energetic little creature burrows down into the ground like a little steam drill until it reaches a grub of the Japanese beetle. The wasp gives it a temporary anesthetic with its stinger and lays an egg within the body. Within seven days the egg hatches and the little wasp emerges from the grub—but not entirely. Its mouth still clings to the body. As it grows, it sucks the vital fluids from the baby beetle, and in 18 days it has died. The little wasp then spins a cocoon and lives beside the body of its victim until the time comes for it to emerge full-grown into the upper air.

But while you are putting the Japanese beetle under control, are you not introducing a lot of other pests as bad or worse than the original? asks the ordinary person. Nothing of the kind, answers the scientist. Take the centeter cinera, for instance. It can exist only in a place where Japanese beetles exist. It can live only on beetle meat and must die without it. When it exists as a fly, it may drink sweet juices from flowers, but even this is uncertain. The prosena siberita, when it exists as a fly, lives on flowers, as does the bee. It, too, along with the wasp, must lay its eggs on the Japanese beetle grub, and without Japanese beetles must perish. Even were these insects to adapt themselves to attack other grubs—which is not at all likely—no harm would result. And so the prime objection of the layman—and one which is raised on all sides—falls flat.

Have the tactics being employed against the Japanese invader ever brought success in the instance of other pests?"

Take the case of the famous outbreak of the fluted scale amongst the orange and lemon groves of California. In the year 1886 this disease, caused by a minute insect, was observed on trees in Menlo Park, and was at once recognized as Australian in origin. The government sent two experts to the scene. One of the men, soon left for Sydney to study the scale in its native haunts. Once in Australia, he found that the tiny insect was kept in check by a kind of beetle known as the ladybird. He gathered a number of grubs of this beetle and shipped them to Los Angeles, where they arrived in good condition.

Ladybird to the Rescue.

By this time many of the fruit-growers believed that the orange and lemon crops of California were forever doomed. Millions and billions of the scales gathered on one tree, sucking the juice and killing it. Groves that had been worth a thousand dollars an acre were being abandoned right and left.

The ladybirds began laying eggs at once and in a short time were being released. They bred with extraordinary rapidity. Each female produced at least 300 larvae, and, if only half of these developed into females, it is estimated that one ladybird increased to seventy-five billion in five months. Within a year the trees were growing oranges and lemons again, and in five years one had to hunt the least vestige of the fluted scale. Never before or since was there so complte a success. The grubs were the ones that ate the scales, and they increased with such extraordinary rapidity that they soon cleaned out the disorder.

Greatest Insect Menace.

The Japanese beetle is said by scientists to be one of the greatest insect menaces that has ever threatened the fields of this or any country. Everything is alike before its insatiable maw. It likes some things better than others, but will eat any living thing if driven to it—and thrive, too.

Handsome Mr. Beetle.

Were the Japanese beetle not so pestiferous, we would have to admit it a handsome creature. It is about the size of a potato bug, only fatter. "The head and thorax and legs are of a brilliant bronze green. The wing covers are brown, tipped with green at the edges. At its sides and at the tip of the abdomen, usually not covered by the wing sheaths, are clearly etched white spots."

The elevation of these lines is expected to be completed by the end of 1933, when the elevated system will be put into operation. The main building will be completed by the end of 1935. Missouri, Too, Has Law Giving Quick Divorce

Reno Has Nothing On 'Show Me' State

HAS EASIEST OF DIVORCE SYSTEMS

By W. G. SECRIT
International News Service Staff Correspondent

KANSAS CITY, July 17.—Reno, the divorce center of the United States, has no advantage over Missouri in the way of law.

Too many years ago for the present crop of lawyers to remember, Missouri's law-making body revised the divorce statutes and somewhere within the legal verbiage there slipped a clause that left this state the quickest and easiest divorce system yet devised.

Nevada and Arkansas legislators somehow neglected to examine the Missouri statutes when they decided to create laws that would speedily liberate dissatisfied mates. Despite efforts of those states to make their laws the most liberal and the quickest in the country, Missouri still leads them by many days in the time required to establish residence.

Under the provisions of this state's divorce law it is possible for a non-resident to obtain a separation, remarry and be on the second honeymoon within a few hours after first setting foot within the state boundaries.

The secret of quick separation, one that enterprising civic leaders who desire to advertise the advantages of their communities have overlooked for many years, is in one little clause that permits a non-resident to establish residence merely by signifying an intention to become a citizen of the state.

Should the marital vows be violated in one of many different manners, under the law recourse many be had immediately in the circuit court.

A visitor to Missouri, may on a moment's notice become a citizen by stating in public that he has decided to become a resident here.

If it is possible for him to induce the wife to agree to an immediate hearing in court, he may go before some circuit judge immediately, present his case, and if the evidence is clearly shown that he had been wronged grievously, he may obtain a decree without delay.

It is possible for all this to occur—entering the state, establishing grounds, filing the petition and receiving the divorce—within a few hours.

Sometimes, however, the sailing is not so smooth, as the divorce seeker may have difficulty in locating the wife for legal service. But all that is required is that the one dissatisfied with the marriage bonds have patience and wait forty-five days while an attorney obtains service by publication.

This requires that a notice appear once a week for four weeks in a newspaper. This manner of serving notice must be completed twenty days before the next term of court. But if the time is guaged correctly the one desiring a separation may be on his way forty-five days after entering the state.

Volcano Rim To Be College Campus

(International News Service)

HILO, Hawiian Islands, July 17.—The rim of a smouldering volcano constitutes the latest word in college campuses here.

The students also will make a special study of all flora and fauna found within the park during the summer months.

FUZAK LIKE ROETTGER
(International News Service)

URBANA, Ill., July 17.—Buster Fuzak, University of Illinois outfielder, who signed for a trial with the St. Louis Cardinals hit .467 in 10 Western conference games. He has been compared to Wallie Roettger, Illini captain in 1924, who is now with the Cincinnati Reds. Illinois led the conference hitting with a team average of .311. A compilation of the hitting marks showed that 35 of the 160 players who appeared in 43 Big Ten games this season hit .300 or better.

For Franco-American Amity

France joined with the United States in observing the Fourth of July—the 155th anniversary of American independence — with fitting ceremonies. Here Carl Berlin, American legionnaire, is shown lighting the flame at the tomb of the Unknown Soldier of France, under the Arc de Triomphe, Paris, as a gesture of amity between the United States and France. American and French officers are shown grouped about the legionnaire as he kindled the sacred flame.

Mobilize Best Minds; End Want, Says Pres. Norlin

(International News Service)

BOULDER, Colo., July 17.—The principle of 'everybody for himself' in this country has gone on the rocks, and the United States must formulate a "national human engineering plan" that will benefit all citizens alike to overcome the existing economic depression, according to George Norlin, president of the University of Colorado.

President Norlin in his baccalaureate address compared present conditions throughout the world to Tantalus, one of the most picturesque examples of torture in the hell of the ancients.

"In the midst of plenty we are in want in the midst of surfeit we lack the necessities of existence," Dr. Norlin said. "At this moment, the civilized peoples of the world are either hungry or afraid of being hungry. Burning with thirst, Tantalus could not reach the cool waters which flowed about him in abundance. Ravening with hunger, he could not touch the luscious fruit which dangled at her very lips.

"To be a prosperous nation, the United States must, as it were, take out articles of incorporation as a partnership of all her citizens for the common good" the speaker continued. "Surely this is manifest now, if it has not been before. No group, no class can prosper save as it shares the prosperity of the whole and only the Nation can heal and preserve the Nation.

"The principle of everybody for himself, or every group for itself, or every block for itself, has gone to pieces on the rocks, and we cling to whatever bits of wreckage come to hand, waiting anxiously through the night for a prosperous dawn. It is a situation which cries out for nothing less than the mobilization of the best brains of the nation, not in the cause of any group or class, but in the cause of the Nation."

Although he views with abhorrence the communistic autocracy in Russia, President Norlin pointed to it as the only government which has embarked upon "a national blueprint human engineering plan to relate production to consumption, to give work to all and put bread in every mouth."

The United States must set out to do the same thing, he said, yet maintain itself as a nation of free people. To accomplish this he suggested that the slogan, "more brains in government" displace and less government in business" pointed out that the brains of the country, "with notable exceptions' are at the service of business and not of government, and condemned the unwillingness of 'our ablest citizens generally" to stand for office.

In describing the present 'intolerable conditions in which only the communist can find satisfaction" President Norlin recalled that economic engineers estimate that more than 50,000,000 men, women and children are either hungry or in daily fear of hunger. In spit of unlimited natural resources, in spite of mass production on a gigantic scale, he said material prosperity has not distributed itself—immense fortunes in few hands increase: the average annual income of the wage earner, $1,500 declines.

Plane Refuses To Leave Ground

Start Of Another Proposed Round World Hop Ends In Near Disaster

(International News Service)

NEW YORK, July 17.—The projected round the world flight of Hugh Herndon and Clyde Pangborn ended in near disaster when their heavily loaded monoplane failed to gain altitude after leaving the ground.

Starting at 7:32 a. m. (E. D. T.) from Roosevelt field No. 1, Pangborn and Herndon piloted the huge Bellanca plane down the mile long runway. The plane, loaded with 830 gallons of gasoline, refused to take the air.

At the end of the runway the plane shot down into a gully. The impact of hitting the bottom of the gully gave the plane sufficient speed to raise it from the ground.

A tense knot of spectators held their breaths as the plane wobbled in the air. A stream of gasoline could be seen flowing from the reserve tanks as the pilots attempted to jettison the heavy load of fuel to lighten their ship.

Only expert piloting of Pangborn saved the lives of the two aviators.

Jockeying the heavy plane to keep it in the air Pangborn, who was at the controls, circled low over Roosevelt field No. 2 and brought the ship down safely.

As Pangborn stepped from the cockpit of the plane, Captain J. Nelson Kelly, manager of the field said:

Nice work, Pang."

The fliers thanked him and declared that they would make another attempt to take off this afternoon or tonight.

"This weather is too good to miss," he said.

Blaine's Attack On Universities Stirs Interest

Says Schools Meet Demand Of Materialistic Philosophy

(International News Service)

VALPARAISO, Ind., July 17.—Much interest has been aroused by the stand taken here by United States Senator John J. Blaine in the commencement address at Valparaisio university.

Colleges and universities have been meeting the demands of a materialistic philosophy, he said, and in most instances the schools, scientists, technicians and skilled artisans have been helpless to do otherwise.

Chemists who will work out a formula for a subtle though efficient, death dealing gas, and engineers who can design an instrument of distruction, are products of these institutions, Senator Blaine declared.

"Great corporations," he said further, "not satisfied with production, but keeping an eye on finance, seek specialized talent that can tell the corporations how to split shares and inflate the stock market when those shares are for sale to the public, and deflate the stock market when the insider desires his lust for more gold.

"With a selfish, sordid, economic complex, we are even without a philosophy of government. As a man on the street the other day put it, we have no government at all; we have a set of laws, executives, legislators and judges. They may settle the individual or tribal differences and cling to the gestures borne out of the past. But to the social, economic and political problems, they are as dumb and inert as the stranded oyster on a summer's day. The obvious they do not recognize.

"Even the basic principles of sound political economy are unheeded. We adopt a tariff policy which no reputable and honest economist would approve, and then seek to correct its injustices through a system of so-called farm relief that does not relieve.

"The call to the colleges and universities is to bring to the service of the state a social and political viewpoint so that 57 men may not run the government and political parties may not continue to be the weak puppets of an intrenched system of privilege."

COURT RUN AT LOSS

(International News Service)

MIDDLETOWN, Conn.—A small claims court was established for Middletown by the state legislature effective May 1, last. In that month the court took in exactly $4.50 and spent 60 cents for postage. The judge gets $2,000 a year, or as someone figured, $91 a month. Therefore the court lost $87 in the single month.

Evict Your Man If You Can, Sheriff!

This war-like scene brings memories of France to mind, but the locale is in far-away Australia. Still, the sandbags and barbed wire entanglements indicate some sort of a war—and there is one in this particular sector of Sydney. The determined looking group of men, many of them ex-soldiers, is guarding the home of an unemployed worker of Sydney who has been threatened with eviction by the sheriff because his rent is in arrears. If the sheriff can go over the top of those solid-looking sandbags and untangle himself from that prickly looking wire he'll be going some!

Capt. Hawks Has Cure For Insomnia

(International News Service)

NEW YORK, July 17.—If you suffer from insomnia and want a sure cure, follow Capt. Frank H. Hawks' advice: "Fly at a height of 21,000 feet over the Alps."

In fact, it is very easy to obtain permanent slumber, he intimates.

He described his own experiences at that height in an address given in New York:

"You get kind of sleepy," he said, and the slightest exertion makes your heart pump like everything. You get dizzy. I had to reach down in the cabin to turn a couple of valves and the effort made things look black for a minute. I could see those St. Bernards, with their little rum casks, yapping all around the mountains looking for me."

Muskrat Becomes Pest In Europe

(International News Service)

PARIS, July 17.—If the United States blames the Europeans for the introduction into their country of the little sparrow which ruins their corn, the latter also have a little score to settle. The New World sent the Old one the muskrat, or, more precisely, the Old World sent over for the little animal to raise for furs. She has learned her lesson, however.

This variety of rat has become a veritable pest in Bohemia, Germany, France and other countries. Accustomed to the great open spaces in America where it may come and go at will, it has been doing the same thing in Europe which is far more populated. A big mistake was made when it was allowed to run free.

Because of great damage done to river and canal banks, etc., war has been declared upon the muskrat. Within the past year, 19,000 of the animals were killed in Bavaria alone.

TREATING POISON IVY

(International News Service)

CHICAGO, July 17.—Poison ivy sufferers are offered two scientific treatments by Dr. J. B. McNair, of the Field Museum. The first is to wash the oil of the ivy plant off the infected parts with ether, chloroform, or strong soap. This is to be followed by soaking cotton in a five per cent solution of ferric chloride added to a fifty-fifty solution of water and alcohol and applying to the infected parts with bandages.

Rivals Strength Nearly Tied In Struggle For Speakership Recalls Historic Deadlocks

By WILLIAM S. NEAL
International News Service Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, July 17.—Historic struggles of the past in the election of a speaker of the House of Representatives may be reenacted when members of that body gather on the first Monday in December.

Already politicians are mapping out their campaigns and expert parliamentarians are digging into musty volumes of the past for precedents to serve in the wrangles certain to occur.

A search of the records has disclosed at least four major, protracted, struggles over the speakership, during which legislation could not be enacted.

With the House members-elect now divided, 216 Republicans, 214 Democrats, one Farmer-Laborite and four vacancies, paper strength may show either a Republican or a Democratic majority in December.

With records disclosing that in the major contests of the past there always were some members absent, due to illness, and because of the uncertainty of the vote of the progressives, a paper majority may mean nothing.

When the new house convenes Clark William Tyler Page will become its "boss." He is charged with calling the House to order and preserving it, and of calling for nominations and taking the vote for speaker.

The four major contests of the past have developed many precedents which will be followed in December.

For example, in 1856 the members-elect decided that before the election of a speaker they would have the meeting opened with prayer. This precedent has been followed ever since that time.

The first protracted contest occurred in the 26th Congress in 1839. The chief difficulty confronting the members was the fact that five of the six New Jersey seats were in question. Two sets of credentials were presented.

For three days nothing was done, and then John Quincy Adams was named chairman of the meeting. The New Jersey votes were set aside. Eleven ballots were necessary to elect a speaker, Robert M. Hunter of Virginia being chosen on the 11th ballot.

In the 34th Congress, 1855-56, Nathaniel P. Banks, Jr., of Massachusetts was elected speaker on the 133rd ballot, the longest contest on record. It lasted from Dec. 3, 1855 to Feb. 2, 1856. While the rule is that a majority of those present must vote for the successful candidate, it was necessary to change the rule in this case, electing the man with a plurality. This later was confirmed by majority vote.

Another contest was staged in the 36th Congress, 1859-1860. On the first ballot Thomas B. Bocock of Virginia led, with John Sherman of Ohio second. The slavery question was brought up before the vote for speaker. On the 44th ballot William Pennington of New Jersey was named speaker.

This settlement of the deadlock was unique, for Pennington was serving his first term in the House. He emerged as a "dark horse" in the balloting.

A spirited contest was waged in the 68th Congress in 1923, when Frederick H. Gillett was named speaker. On the first ballot he received 127 votes to 105 for Finis Garrett of Tennessee, Democrat; 17 for Henry Allen Cooper, Wisconsin progressive, and five for Martin Madden, Republican.

The Wisconsin progressives held the balance of power, and it was not until the regular Republicans capitulated and liberalized the rules that they voted for Gillett. On the final vote but 418 members were present out of a total membership of 435, and but 414 were in the chamber when the voting began. The contest lasted three days.

Much of the uncertainty of the early day contests may be removed by caucuses before the session. There still remains the question of what the progressives will do.

The precedents disclose that the Senates has not usually proceeded to legislative business before the House organized. A long contest in the House next December, thus may disorganize the whole legislative program.

Survey Crews Are Finishing Work On Canal

Expect Field Study To Be Completed By First Of November This Year

WILL SUBMIT REPORT TO CHIEFS JANUARY 1

Four survey crews are rapidly completing the task of the field work on the Mahoning, Shenango, and Beaver rivers, authorized by congress at its recent session. The men are working under the U. S. Army Engineers office in Pittsburgh and expect to complete their task by November 1 of this year.

As soon as the field work is completed, an economic study will be made, and the maps prepared for a report to be submitted on January 1, 1932.

According to Lieut. L. F. Rhoades of the Pittsburgh office, the men are filling in serial topographical maps. Two of the groups are working out of New Castle, one out of Sharon, and one out of Pulaski. Seventy-five per cent of the work has already been completed.

Lieut. Rhoades will be in charge of the economic survey to be made later on, which will consist of a study of the water supply of the various districts and the annual freight tonnage.

Recently, changes were made in the personnel of the Pittsburgh office, but this will have no bearing on the survey, it is stated. Lieut. Col. Jarvis J. Bain, who was formerly in charge of the Pittsburgh office has been relieved from duty there.

Lieut. Col. Bain will be succeeded by Major Wilhelm D. Styer, now connected with the American Monument commission in France. Capt. Harry W. Hill is in temporary charge of the office.

The state of Ohio has authorized a state waterway commission and H. S. Warwick, assistant secretary of the Beaver, Mahoning, and Shenango Rivers Improvement Association will attend a conference called by Gov. George White in Columbus today.

Not Clear Sailing As Yet On Plan For German Loan

England Not Favorable To Foreign Control Over German Customs Officers

By OTTO D. TOLISCHUS
International News Service Staff Correspondent

LONDON, July 17.—An indication that all is not yet clear sailing at Paris, where the German Chancellor Bruening will arrive today to negotiate with French officials for a new long-term German loan, was thrown out here today.

London evening newspapers published a statement, obviously from inspired sources, declaring the British government will not view with favor any proposal for foreign control over German customs collections.

Such a proposal is generally understood to be one of the French conditions to participating in a new loan to Germany.

"France's demand that some sort of control be established over German customs as one of the conditions to French participation in a loan to Germany will not be acceptable to the British government," the statement said.

Training Child To Care For Pets Is Problem

By GARRY C. MYERS, PH. D.
Head Division Parental Education, Cleveland College, Western Reserve University.

Your Jim is eight. He always has wanted a dog.

One day a hungry, ugly-looking cur follows Jim and makes friends with him. Jim brings him home, finds a rope with which he holds the dog, and feeds the little beggar.

Jim is all excited. He sees his dreams come true. Here is a dog at last.

You have a serious problem facing you. You are glad the boy has been kind and tender toward the stray animal, but you don't know anything about it nor do you want to have the dog around. You may just have no place or means by which the animal can be properly cared for.

If you are very sure you cannot have the dog "adopted" you have the task of persuading the child to give it up. In that event, the honest promise of a more desirable dog or of something else, may help you succeed. You do not wish merely to turn the poor dog away. You can get in touch with the Humane society of your neighborhood or city, who will properly dispose of it.

Before another pet is promised, or the child given permission to keep this dog, you will be sure in your own mind that Jim will care for the pet continuously.

Of course, he will promise you in all good faith to care for it. But you must first know whether he will be able on his own accord or with your guidance, to assume all responsibility for it. Certainly he will feed this precious pet with great kindness for a few days, and even may bathe it a few times. But once the novelty has worn off what will happen?

You and I know very well that, perhaps, only one child out of twenty really takes complete responsibility for the pet he is old enough to care for properly. The pet's care falls to the mother or some other members of the household. All the while the child may be scolded often every day for his negligence. For a child of eight or older to have a pet he does not learn regularly to care for without being reminded or hounded to do so, is a moral loss.

Suppose that Jim's tearful promises and pleadings had persuaded you to let him keep the stray dog or to get him another one; and suppose after two days he began to neglect it. It is not enough merely to dispose of the dog then. Jim volunteered to stand by a program. He was taken at his word. Now he must be held to it for several weeks at least. Set a future date, say a month, up to which time he must care for that dog, following a strict program. Let Jim Learn, for instance, that when the dog misses a meal he must miss one also. Don't talk; act. Be exacting. Jim's character is at stake.

Students Of 3 Nations Hold 2nd Conference

(International News Service)

ANN ARBOR, Mich., July 17.—The British and American Students Conference on International Affairs, which, starting here on July 12, will run to July 19, is attracting wide attention. This is the second to be held. The first took place in 1929 at Oxford University, England.

An important part of the work of the Division of Intercourse and Education of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace, is the formation and upkeep of International Relations Clubs among undergraduates in the colleges and universities of the United States and Europe. It is from these clubs in the United States and Canada and from the British Universities League of Nations Societies, that the Endowment has chosen the fifty-five students gathered for the Ann Arbor Conference. Miss Amy Heminway Jones, of the Endowment, has charge of the International Relations Clubs in the United States, and is chairman of the Conference.

Twenty-seven British students are listed: four from Canada and twenty-four from the United States.

The purpose of the conference, as set forth by the Endowment, is to "bring together students from various parts of the British Empire and the United States to discuss problems of such vital international interest as those chosen for consideration in the three Commissions upon which the program is based."

These Commissions are: First, "What Follows the Pact of Paris?"; second, "Limitation of Armaments,"; and third, "International Regional Organizations."

Women Flyers Aim To Win New Laurels At National Air Meet

By G. EVERETT DOYING
International News Service Staff Correspondent

CLEVELAND, July 17.—Women flyers will take a more prominent part in the 1931 National Air Races to be staged her Aug. 29 to Sept. 7 than ever before. They are entering in large numbers, competing in more events and seeking to show the world what feminine interest has done to, and for aviation.

They are entering the numerous events in perfect seriousness and with but one aim. That aim is to win new laurels by breaking records, at the same time furnishing spine-chills to several thousand spectators with their daring feats.

Many new faces, a majority of them eager and flushed with recent successes, will be seen among this galaxy of aviatresses. The nucleus of this woman's flying armada, however, will be built around old faces—not old in years, but in experience.

One of the most interesting of the newer contestants in this year's events is Dorothy Hester, 19-year-old Portland, Ore., girl-flyer. Two years ago she made parachute jumps at public gatherings to earn money for flying lessons. Tex Ranklin, internationally-known pilot, took her as a protege. Last May she set a woman's record of 62 outside loops in succession, the most difficult stunt in the game. Rankin holds the men's world record of 78.

Ruth Nichols, the Rye, N. Y., society aviatrix who crashed when she started a non-stop solo flight across the Atlantic recently, is expected to attempt to better her present women's speed record of 210 miles an hour at the National Air Races.

Two well-known women pilots, both mothers of small children, already have announced their intention of entering the free-for-all derby from California to Cleveland. Mrs. Louis McPhetridge Thaden, first in the heavy plane division in 1929, will leave her eight-months-old baby in Pittsburgh to compete.

The other entrant will be Mrs. Gladys O'Donnell of Long Beach, Calif., mother of two children, and winner in the light plane event last year.

Mrs. Florence Lowe Barnes of Santa Marino, Calif., has announced a "mystery ship" will be ready for her by the time of the races and she will attempt to win Ruth Nichols' speed laurels. Some of the other women pilots expected to be present are Amelia Earhart Putnam, Elinor Smith, Betty Lund, Thea Rasche, Mrs. Keith-Miller and Jean LaRene and others.

Nine events are on the Air Races schedule exclusively for women pilots this year. In addition to these, daily parachute jumping and "dead stick" landing contests for women are scheduled.

Playing hostess to this galaxy of women flyers will be Cleveland's leading aviatrix who also will participate in the races. She is Mrs. Blanche Wilcox Noyes, one of the first women in the country to be assigned to pilot an autogiro. She also holds a transport license.

Miss Louise Vamos, co-pilot on the Pennsylvania good-will tour last summer and a native Clevelander, will act as Mrs. Noyes' aide as hostess besides competing in the cross-country event.

Controlling the Insect Population

Science Successfully Fights Pest With Parasite

THE story of the fight against the Japanese beetle is as entrancing as the history of a military campaign. The idea of stamping out the pest has long since been given up. The Japanese beetle will exist, in all probability, in the United States to the end of time. What is hoped to do, however, is to colonize so many of the insect's enemies that the beetle will no longer be a menace. It is a fight of bug against bug.

Introduction Accidental.

When the grubs of the Japanese beetle were accidentally introduced into Burlington county, New Jersey, in a nursery importation in the years prior to 1916, they found none of their hereditary enemies which feed upon them in their native Japan. For once in the millions of years of their existence, every grub became a beetle instead of maybe five or ten out of a hundred. The beetle had come to the United States, but not its enemies. The perfect balance in nature, which forbids one kind of bug to become unduly numerous, was removed. There are many, many bugs which would become obnoxious under these circumstances. In experiments performed in Washington some years ago, it was found that from 95 to 97 native caterpillars out of a hundred were killed by parasites.

When the Japanese beetle became firmly established here, the government scientists saw that the only way to combat it was to import from Japan the parasite which attack and keep it under control in that country. In Japan bean beetle, as it is called there, is not considered a pest.

Numerous enemies of the bettle were discovered and catalogued and literally tons of grubs and bugs shipped to the United States. Some were unable to stand the climate and died, while others thrived and increased in ever-greater profusion. Then, too, before any of the creatures could be released to feed upon the bectle, it had to be determined beyond a shadow of a doubt that they would not be equal or greater pests than the beetles themselves.

Looks Like House Fly.

The chief foe or parasite of the beetle was found to be a little insect known to scientists as the centeter cinera, a fly belonging to the Tashnid group of insects. This creature, somewhat smaller than the ordinary type of house fly and with minute grayish stripes running horizontally along its body, is responsible for the death of 50 per cent of the Japanese beetles in its native home. The fly lays a number of little whiteish eggs just behind the head of the beetle. In a short while they hatch, and the tiny baby grubs enter the body of the host and immediately begin filling their stomachs with Japanese beetle meat. The pest becomes sick and enters the ground, dying in six days from the time the fly laid the eggs upon its body. The baby centeter cinera does not die, however, but spins itself a cocoon and awaits the coming of Spring within the dead dead body of the Japanese beetle. Then it emerges as a fly and lays its eggs upon more of the pests. How many Japanese beetles a healthy egg-laying centeter can get rid of in a Summer can scarcely be computed. Experiments have shown that this fly, for some unknown reason, confines its egg-laying mostly to female beeties, and so is doubly destructive.

Parasites Thrive.

The grubs of this centeter cinera were shipped to the United States and thrived amazingly. Great hopes for the control of the Japanese beetle center in this insignificant-looking centeter cinera.

Another insect, similar in appearance, which is responsible for the death of 12 per cent of the Japanese beetles in Japan, is the prosena siberita or dixiid fly. It, too, resembles the familiar house pest but is larger. This insect attacks the grubs, and not the beetles themselves, as is the case with the centeter cinera. When springtime comes, it lays from 600 to 700 eggs upon the ground. These hatch in a little while and, directed by the sense of smell, burrow down into the ground and scent out the grubs of the Japanese beetle. They attach themselves to the trachea or breathing tube of the developing insect and immediately begin to deprive it of a part of its necessary air. After a few weeks the prosena siberita grows so large and needs so much oxygen that its host dies entirely. It then forms a cocoon inside of the dead grub of the Japanese beetle and hibernates until the following Spring. This parasite has also been found to thrive very well in the United States.

Wasp From Korea.

A third parasite to which the scientists are pinning a good deal of hope is a small Korean (diosena dixiid) wasp, with a small and dark but business-looking kind of body. This energetic little creature burrows down into the ground like a little steam drill until it reaches a grub of the Japanese beetle. The wasp gives it a temporary anesthetic with its stinger and lays an egg within the body. Within seven days the egg hatches and the little wasp emerges from the grub—but not entirely. Its mouth still clings to the body. As it grows, it sucks the vital fluids from the baby beetle, and in 18 days it has died. The little wasp then spins a cocoon and lives beside the body of its victim until the time comes for it to emerge full-grown into the upper air.

But while you are putting the Japanese beetle under control, are you not introducing a lot of other pests as bad or worse than the original? asks the ordinary person. Nothing of the kind, answers the scientist. Take the centeter cinera, for instance. It can exist only in a place where Japanese beetles exist. It can live only on beetle meat and must die without it. When it exists as a fly, it may drink sweet juices from flowers, but even this is uncertain. The prosena siberita, when it exists as a fly, lives on flowers, as does the bee. It, too, along with the wasp, must lay its eggs on the Japanese beetle grub, and without Japanese beetles must perish. Even were these insects to adapt themselves to attack other grubs—which is not at all likely—no harm would result. And so the prime objection of the layman—and one which is raised on all sides—falls flat.

Have the tactics being employed against the Japanese invader ever brought success in the instance of other pests?"

Take the case of the famous outbreak of the fluted scale amongst the orange and lemon groves of California. In the year 1886 this disease, caused by a minute insect, was observed on trees in Menlo Park, and was at once recognized as Australian in origin. The government sent two experts to the scene. One of the men, soon left for Sydney to study the scale in its native haunts. Once in Australia, he found that the tiny insect was kept in check by a kind of beetle known as the ladybird. He gathered a number of grubs of this beetle and shipped them to Los Angeles, where they arrived in good condition.

Ladybird to the Rescue.

By this time many of the fruit-growers believed that the orange and lemon crops of California were forever doomed. Millions and billions of the scales gathered on one tree, sucking the juice and killing it. Groves that had been worth a thousand dollars an acre were being abandoned right and left.

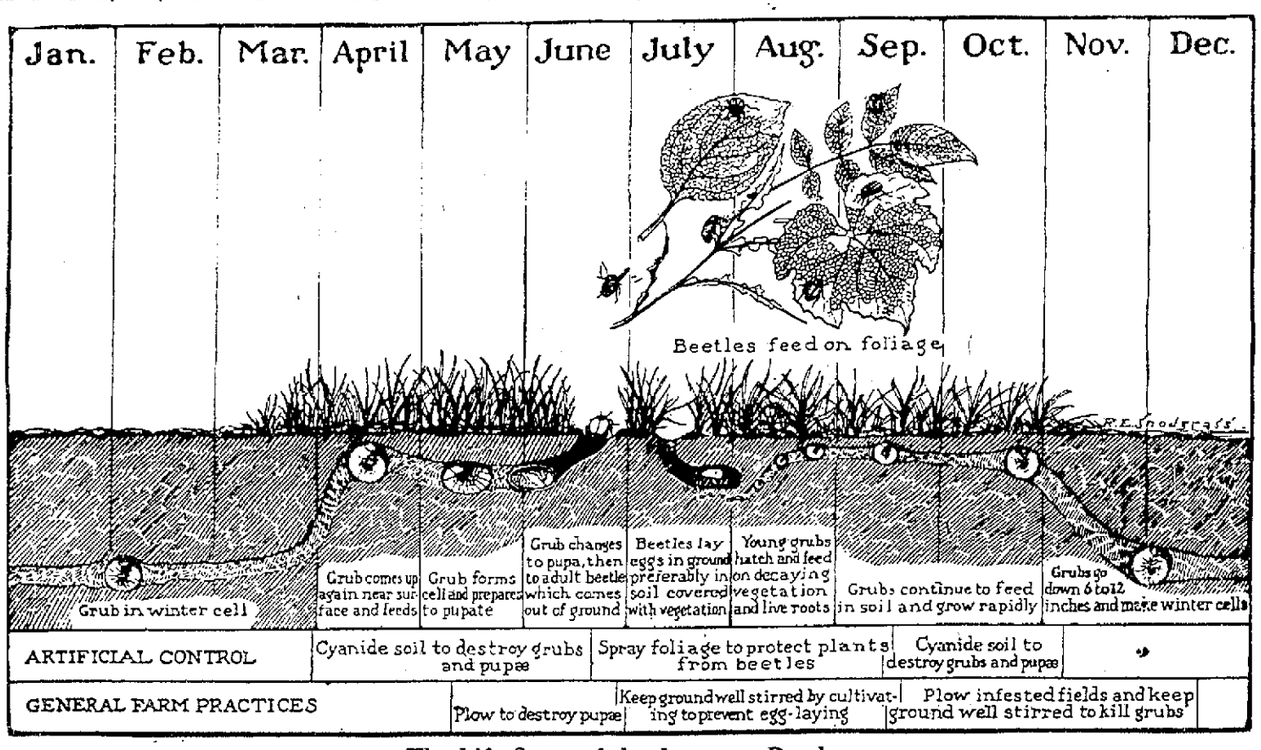
The ladybirds began laying eggs at once and in a short time were being released. They bred with extraordinary rapidity. Each female produced at least 300 larvae, and, if only half of these developed into females, it is estimated that one ladybird increased to seventy-five billion in five months. Within a year the trees were growing oranges and lemons again, and in five years one had to hunt the least vestige of the fluted scale. Never before or since was there so complte a success. The grubs were the ones that ate the scales, and they increased with such extraordinary rapidity that they soon cleaned out the disorder.

Greatest Insect Menace.

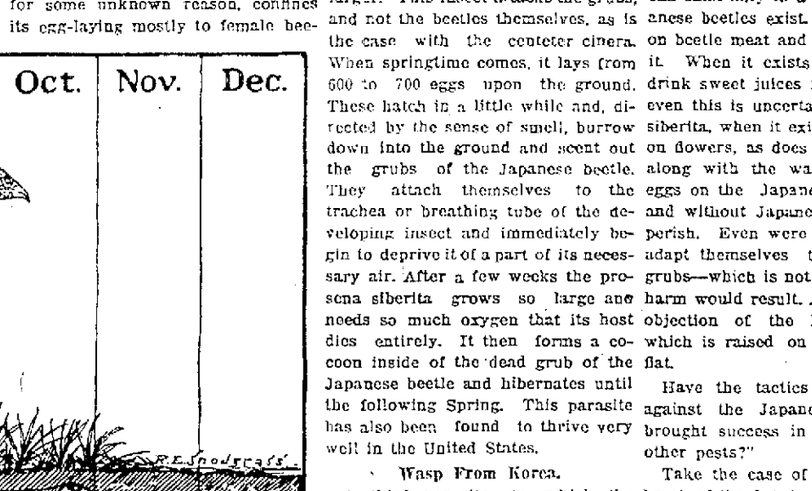
The Japanese beetle is said by scientists to be one of the greatest insect menaces that has ever threatened the fields of this or any country. Everything is alike before its insatiable maw. It likes some things better than others, but will eat any living thing if driven to it—and thrive, too.

Handsome Mr. Beetle.

Were the Japanese beetle not so pestiferous, we would have to admit it a handsome creature. It is about the size of a potato bug, only fatter. "The head and thorax and legs are of a brilliant bronze green. The wing covers are brown, tipped with green at the edges. At its sides and at the tip of the abdomen, usually not covered by the wing sheaths, are clearly etched white spots."



The Life Story of the Japanese Beetle.



The sugar cane leaf hopper, which in 1903 damaged the sugar cane crop of Hawaii to the extent of $3,000,000. At the left is the Paranagrus optabilis, which knocked it out of the running within three years. Upper right, grub of the Japanese beetle.

Golden Gleanings

One should take good care not to grow too wise for so great a pleasure of life as laughter.

After an hour and 51 minutes the jury acquitted the man who has been seriously wounded on numerous occasions by attempts made on his life and who has escaped punishment innumerable times for crimes for which he was tried. Missouri, Too, Has Law Giving Quick Divorce

Reno Has Nothing On 'Show Me' State

HAS EASIEST OF DIVORCE SYSTEMS

By W. G. SECRIT
International News Service Staff Correspondent

KANSAS CITY, July 17.—Reno, the divorce center of the United States, has no advantage over Missouri in the way of law.

Too many years ago for the present crop of lawyers to remember, Missouri's law-making body revised the divorce statutes and somewhere within the legal verbiage there slipped a clause that left this state the quickest and easiest divorce system yet devised.

Nevada and Arkansas legislators somehow neglected to examine the Missouri statutes when they decided to create laws that would speedily liberate dissatisfied mates. Despite efforts of those states to make their laws the most liberal and the quickest in the country, Missouri still leads them by many days in the time required to establish residence.

Under the provisions of this state's divorce law it is possible for a non-resident to obtain a separation, remarry and be on the second honeymoon within a few hours after first setting foot within the state boundaries.

The secret of quick separation, one that enterprising civic leaders who desire to advertise the advantages of their communities have overlooked for many years, is in one little clause that permits a non-resident to establish residence merely by signifying an intention to become a citizen of the state.

Should the marital vows be violated in one of many different manners, under the law recourse may be had immediately in the circuit court.

A visitor to Missouri, may on a moment's notice become a citizen by stating in public that he has decided to become a resident here.

If it is possible for him to induce the wife to agree to an immediate hearing in court, he may go before some circuit judge immediately, present his case, and if the evidence is clearly shown that he had been wronged grievously, he may obtain a decree without delay.

It is possible for all this to occur—entering the state, establishing grounds, filing the petition and receiving the divorce—within a few hours.

Sometimes, however, the sailing is not so smooth, as the divorce seeker may have difficulty in locating the wife for legal service. But all that is required is that the one dissatisfied with the marriage bonds have patience and wait forty-five days while an attorney obtains service by publication.

This requires that a notice appear once a week for four weeks in a newspaper. This manner of serving notice must be completed twenty days before the next term of court. But if the time is guaged correctly the one desiring a separation may be on his way forty-five days after entering the state.

FUZAK LIKE ROETTGER
(International News Service)

URBANA, Ill., July 17.—Buster Fuzak, University of Illinois outfielder, who signed for a trial with the St. Louis Cardinals hit .487 in 10 Western conference games. He has been compared to Wallie Roettger, Illini captain in 1924, who is now with the Cincinnati Reds. Illinois led the conference hitting with a team average of .311. A compilation of the hitting marks showed that 35 of the 160 players who appeared in 43 Big Ten games this season hit .300 or better.

Plane Refuses To Leave Ground

Start Of Another Proposed Round World Hop Ends In Near Disaster

(International News Service)

NEW YORK, July 17.—The projected round the world flight of Hugh Herndon and Clyde Pangborn ended in near disaster when their heavily loaded monoplane failed to gain altitude after leaving the ground.

Starting at 7:32 a. m. (E. D. T.) from Roosevelt field No. 1, Pangborn and Herndon piloted the huge Bellanca plane down the mile long runway. The plane, loaded with 830 gallons of gasoline, refused to take the air.

At the end of the runway the plane shot down into a gully. The impact of hitting the bottom of the gully gave the plane sufficient speed to raise it from the ground.

A tense knot of spectators held their breaths as the plane wobbled in the air. A stream of gasoline could be seen flowing from the reserve tanks as the pilots attempted to jettison the heavy load of fuel to lighten their ship.

Only expert piloting of Pangborn saved the lives of the two aviators.

Jockeying the heavy plane to keep it in the air Pangborn, who was at the controls, circled low over Roosevelt field No. 2 and brought the ship down safely.

As Pangborn stepped from the cockpit of the plane, Captain J. Nelson Kelly, manager of the field said:

Nice work, Pang."

The fliers thanked him and declared that they would make another attempt to take off this afternoon or tonight.

"This weather is too good to miss," he said.

Mobilize Best Minds; End Want, Says Pres. Norlin

(International News Service)

BOULDER, Colo., July 17.—The principle of 'everybody for himself" in this country has gone on the rocks, and the United States must formulate a "national human engineering plan" that will benefit all citizens alike to overcome the existing economic depression, according to George Norlin, president of the University of Colorado.

President Norlin in his baccalaureate address compared present conditions throughout the world to Tantalus, one of the most picturesque examples of torture in the hell of the ancients.

"In the midst of plenty we are in want in the midst of surfeit we lack the necessities of existence," Dr. Norlin said. "At this moment, the civilized peoples of the world are either hungry or afraid of being hungry. Burning with thirst, Tantalus could not reach the cool waters which flowed about him in abundance. Ravening with hunger, he could not touch the luscious fruit which dangled at her very lips.

"To be a prosperous nation, the United States must, as it were, take out articles of incorporation as a partnership of all her citizens for the common good" the speaker continued. "Surely this is manifest now, if it has not been before. No group, no class can prosper save as it shares the prosperity of the whole and only the Nation can heal and preserve the Nation.

"The principle of everybody for himself, or every group for itself, or every block for itself, has gone to pieces on the rocks, and we cling to whatever bits of wreckage come to hand, waiting anxiously through the night for a prosperous dawn. It is a situation which cries out for nothing less than the mobilization of the best brains of the nation, not in the cause of any group or class, but in the cause of the Nation."

Although he views with abhorrence the communistic autocracy in Russia, President Norlin pointed to it as the only government which has embarked upon "a national blueprint human engineering plan to relate production to consumption, to give work to all and put bread in every mouth."

The United States must set out to do the same thing, he said, yet maintain itself as a nation of free people. To accomplish this he suggested that the slogan, 'more brains in government' displace and less government in business" pointed out that the brains of the country, "with notable exceptions' are at the service of business and not of government, and condemned the unwillingness of 'our ablest citizens generally" to stand for office.

In describing the present 'intolerable conditions in which only the communist can find satisfaction" President Norlin recalled that economic engineers estimate that more than 50,000,000 men, women and children are either hungry or in daily fear of hunger. In spit of unlimited natural resources, in spite of mass production on a gigantic scale, he said material prosperity has not distributed itself—immense fortunes in few hands increase: the average annual income of the wage earner, $1,300 declines.

Kit Carson—5. Kit's First Indian Fight

AFTER YOUNG KIT CARSON HAD JOINED THE TRAPPERS ON THEIR WAY INTO THE GILA COUNTRY HE LEARNED WITH CONSIDERABLE SURPRISE THAT HUNTING BEAVERS WAS NOT THE ONLY OBJECT OF THE EXPEDITION. THEY HAD SET OUT TO PUNISH A HOSTILE TRIBE OF INDIANS LIVING ON SALT RIVER WHO THE SEASON BEFORE HAD MURDERED A NUMBER OF WHITE HUNTERS. THE TRAPPERS MOVED WITH GREAT CAUTION AS THEY APPROACHED SALT RIVER . . . . . .

A FEW DAYS LATER KIT WAS ONE OF A PICKED PARTY THAT STOLE FORWARD JUST BEFORE DAWN TO ATTACK THE INDIAN CAMP, WHICH ONE OF THE SCOUTS HAD LOCATED IN A NARROW CANYON. KIT WAS TENSE WITH EXCITEMENT.

(Copyright, 1931, by J. Carroll Mansfield)

AT A SIGNAL THE RATTLE OF RIFLE FIRE ROUSED THE ECHOES IN THE CANYON. THEN CAME WILD YELLS AND ANSWERING SHOTS AS THE STARTLED REDSKINS EMERGED FROM THE LODGES AND DASHED FOR THEIR PONIES. THE CANYON RANG WITH THE DIN OF BATTLE.

THE SHOOTING CEASED ABRUPTLY. A FEW INDIANS LAY DEAD IN THE CANYON, WHILE THE REST OF THE BAND RACED OFF IN HEADLONG FLIGHT. THE TRAPPERS DID NOT PURSUE. THEY HAD SETTLED THE SCORE. KIT HAD BORNE HIMSELF WELL IN HIS FIRST FIGHT.

Survey Crews Are Finishing Work On Canal

WILL SUBMIT REPORT TO CHIEFS JANUARY 1

Four survey crews are rapidly completing the task of the field work on the Mahoning, Shenango, and Beaver rivers, authorized by congress at its recent session. The men are working under the U. S. Army Engineers office in Pittsburgh and expect to complete their task by November 1 of this year.

As soon as the field work is completed, an economic study will be made, and the maps prepared for a report to be submitted on January 1, 1932.

According to Lieut. L. F. Rhoades of the Pittsburgh office, the men are filling in serial topographical maps. Two of the groups are working out of New Castle, one out of Sharon, and one out of Pulaski. Seventy-five per cent of the work has already been completed.

Lieut. Rhoades will be in charge of the economic survey to be made later on, which will consist of a study of the water supply of the various districts and the annual freight tonnage.

Recently, changes were made in the personnel of the Pittsburgh office, but this will have no bearing on the survey, it is stated. Lieut. Col. Jarvis J. Bain, who was formerly in charge of the Pittsburgh office has been relieved from duty there.

Lieut. Col. Bain will be succeeded by Major Wilhelm D. Styer, now connected with the American Monument commission in France. Capt. Harry W. Hill is in temporary charge of the office.

The state of Ohio has authorized a state waterway commission and H. S. Warwick, assistant secretary of the Beaver, Mahoning, and Shenango Rivers Improvement Association will attend a conference called by Gov. George White in Columbus today.

Not Clear Sailing As Yet On Plan For German Loan

England Not Favorable To Foreign Control Over German Customs Officers

By OTTO D. TOLISCHUS
International News Service Staff Correspondent

LONDON, July 17.—An indication that all is not yet clear sailing at Paris, where the German Chancellor Bruening will arrive today to negotiate with French officials for a new long-term German loan, was thrown out here today.

London evening newspapers published a statement, obviously from inspired sources, declaring the British government will not view with favor any proposal for foreign control over German customs collections.

Such a proposal is generally understood to be one of the French conditions to participating in a new loan to Germany.

"France's demand that some sort of control be established over German customs as one of the conditions to French participation in a loan to Germany will not be acceptable to the British government," the statement said.

Boxers Hope To Capture Honors

They're Getting In Shape For Coming Fistic Clashes Here

UBALDO HOPES TO SECURE BOUT SOON

In every city in the country there is always some chap of a pugilistic nature who falls into the good graces of fandom and when Monday night arrives there'll be a galaxy of local fistic knights who will swing gloves in hope of having their praises sung and of some day occupying a promient place in the world of punch.

Years ago George Chip meandered into town with a squatty frame and good intentions. He had a stout heart and a desire to do as instructed and before he had hung up the gloves forever he had won the middleweight championship of the world. His fame was sung worldwide.

Chip was the only chap to have won and lost a title while a resident of the city but other boys who made good in the game were Tony Ross, Tom McMahon, Dan Dailey, Joe Chip, Battling Terry, Tommy Jones, Babe Picato, Patsy Brannigan, Carl Cavelli and Emmett Rocco of Ellwood City is now occupying the limelight.

Gibson Versus Barry.

Mickey Solomon is making another bid for fistic honors and since his attempted comeback has been doing good. Boys who are trying to get to the position that some of these boys held have been battling as preliminary boxers and have pleased fans with their display of punch.

A few weeks ago seven four round bouts were staged and practically every one of the tilts was good. Fans left the Castle Bowl singing the praise of the battlers and expressed the desire that another carnival of seven contests be staged and it will be promoted Monday night.

Merle Gibson will take on Baby Barry of Kittanning. Barry is a stranger here. They are middleweights. Bill Donnelli will meet Joe Levoskey of Kittanning. They will weigh 163 pounds. Jackie Ruffner, Kittanning, will meet Billy Mido of New Castle, at 120 pounds.

Kid Wright and Billy Frengel, 143 pounders of New Castle will let 'em fly. In another bout Joe Boldin, Cleveland, and Joe Di Muccio, this city, will clash and in the last four rounder on the calendar, Marshall Counette of Cleveland and Ay Taylor of Lorrain, O., will step forth.

Emmett Rocco is in training for his bout with Huffy Griffiths at Pittsburgh. He is using Mickey Solomon and Morrie Suber of New Castle as training mates. Rocco hopes to trot along with Griffith then cast punches with Charlie Retzlaff who also hails from Chicago. Retzlaff is a right smart battler.

Primo Ubaldo, in an interview with Jimmy Doyle of the Cleveland Plain Dealer uttered a loud complaint. He claimed that some of the boys were ducking him. He is a native of Rome, Italy, and has been going fairly good since he arrived, as Doyle put it in the United States.

Johnny Banko will soon be seen in action, it is believed. Banko underwent an operation for appendicitis and Bob Latera is using good judgment in not rushing him back into the ring. Banko is one of the best punchers the city preliminary ranks has.

Frankie Frey is somewhat peeved because he did not get a return whack at Merle Gibson. Merle, it will be recalled is the chap who closed Frey's eye then peppered him for a decision in their four round bout. No doubt Frey will get a chance to meet the winner of the Gibson-Barry bout.

Even fighters must have a vacation. Homer Gray is said to be in the vicinity of Cambridge Springs. Homer was anxious to get lots of fights and when he was paged it was discovered he had gone for a vacation. When he returns he will find Joe Levoskey or Bill Donnelli ready for action.

Frankie Steimack would have made a good opponent for Jimmy Scott of Bridgeport but Frankie didn't care to accept the date and Scott, being too good, for the other 135 pounders here he couldn't be scheduled. The same applied to Jim Velinich, heavyweight, who stands out above all the othere local heavyweights.

It looks very much as though a stomach ailment will probably keep Romeo Pacelli out of the ring for some time. He had been matched with Al Taylor but after a few days training Pacelli had to ask that he be removed from the card. Marshall Couette was put in Romeo's place.

Reports from Cleveland state that Frankie Rio, once a favorite here, would like to re-enter the game. Frankie fought recently at Cleveland and suffered a knockout. Frankie put up some good fights here, especially in his encounters with Billy Wallace of Youngstown who has become a past performer.

Fans recalled a few days that one of the best fights ever staged at the Bowl was fought by Wildcat Auskings and Louie Severio and also by Al Reno and Severio. Severio won twice from Reno. Of them all it is believed that Auskings was as husky a junior lightweight as trod the ring locally.

(Special To The News)

NEW WILMINGTON, Pa., July 17—What do college athletic coaches and officials do during the summer? That question can be answered with regard to Westminster college mentors by saying that the vacation period, so-called, sees the men in varied activities.

John D. Lawther, director of athletic and coach of football and basketball, spent the latter part of June moving from Freeport, L. I. to New Wilmington to take up again his duties at the Titan helm. R. X. Graham, track coach, is spending his fifth summer at the University of Wisconsin where he is writing his thesis and taking his oral examinations for the master's degree. Graham is also columnist and feature writer on the staff of the Daily Cardinal.

The entire sports staff of the United Presbyterian school will be together in New Wilmington from August 15 on. A number of matters of importance will be thrashed out with the athletic council, which meets monthly, and plans for the football season will be made.

Heavyweight Contender Scores 29th Knockout; Steve Hamas Also Wins

By LES CONKLIN
International News Service Sports Writer

NEW YORK, July 17.—Two rising young heavyweight stars gleamed with renewed brilliance in the fistic firmament today.

Charlesy Retzlaff and Steve Hamas, these will be names to conjure with in the heavyweight division during the next few years. Both looked the part of coming champions last night by easily disposing of their opponents at the Queensboro stadium in Brooklyn.

Retzlaff, the Minnesota knockout king who already has been picked as a future wearer of the purple robes by Max Schmeling, made an impressive eastern debut by scoring a technical knockout over Ralph Ficucello, sturdy Brooklyn Italian and former national amateur champion, in the second round of their scheduled ten-rounder. It was the gangling farmer boy's 29th knockout in 33 starts.

Hamas also won by a technical knockout. The victim of the former Penn State athletic star was Ted Sandwina, German-American heavyweight, who took a terrific shellacking before the referee stopped the one-sided affair in the third round.

"Muny" Course Is Inspected By Committee

Original Construction Committee And Operating Committee Play Course

DISCUSS PLANS FOR IMPROVEMENTS

Members of the original construction committee, together with the present operating committee, played the Municipal Course Thursday afternoon, in order to determine the condition of the course and acquaint themselves better with the things that are needed to make the course still better.

Those in the group were Howard B. Richards, L. B. Round and Dan Woolcock, members of the operating committee: and W. J. Offutt, James M. Smith Sr., Robert J. Tully and H. L. Gordon, who were members of the original construction committee.

They found the course in splendid condition, but found several places where improvements can be made to better the condition of the course and make it more popular with the public.

Hundreds of new golfers are frequenting the course this year, the committee found, and most of those who were members last year are again enrolled.

A great many things have been done to improve the course this year and as fast as money becomes available from the receipts of the course, it will be put back in additional improvements, members of the operating committees state.

Through economies in operation and in purchasing needed equipment and supplies many things have been done this year which could not have otherwise been accomplished.

A great amount of drain tile was put in place to keep the water off the low places, and additional tile will be put in late this fall and early next spring. Besides that, the entrance to the course was beautified: additional fairway seeded and improved: the rough along the different holes was reduced, a fence erected about the septic tanks on hole 15 and other improvements made.

Within a few more years, the course will be made one of the finest municipal courses in the state, and one which the citizens of New Castle can well be proud of.

Chicago Cubs Topple Giants

St. Louis Cardinals Blank Brooklyn, 5-0; Athletics Win, 5-3

INDIANS NOSE OUT YANKS, 9-8

By COPELAND C. BURG
International News Service Sports Writer

NEW YORK, July 17.—Rogers Hornsby may have an ingrowing heel and the same kind of a disposition but the position of the Chicago Cubs today in the National League fight indicates there's nothing much the matter with his head.

The Cubs whacked the New York Giants on the chin again yesterday, 5 to 2, and moved into second place, six games to the rear of St. Louis, with Mr. Hornsby still playing third and Jurges at second.

Hallahan was as mysterious as a veiled woman to the Brooklyn Robins and when his teammates, Watkins and Hafey hit homers the result turned out St. Louis 5, Brooklyn 0. Phelps, the Brooklyn gent often described as a great hurler, was not that good, allowing five hits in the six innings he graced the scene.

Roy Mahaffey gave the Detroit Tigers 10 hits but he hit a homer and Philadelphia took another, 5 to 3.

Boston got eight hits off Gray against five safeties by St. Louis off Lisenbee and Moore but the Brownies took it, 2 to 1.

Babe Ruth hit a homer and so did Lou Gehrig and even Pitcher Ruffing, but 11 bases on balls by Mr. Ruffing and a couple of his boy friends, who succeeded him, proved too generous and the Cleveland Indians humbled the Yankees, 9 to 8.

China Puts End To Slave-Girl System

(International News Service)

NANKING, July 17.—The Central government has ordered an end to the system of slave girls. These unfortunates are usually sold by parents who are in dire financial straits.

Owners are now commanded to return the victims to their parents, or when that is not possible, to permit the slaves to select their own husbands when they reach a marriageable age.

Along the same line, the government has issued an interdiction against the old custom of taking future daughter-in-law into the home when they are still little girls and there forcing them to do the drugery under cruel treatment from mothers-in-law.

HOME-MADE PLANE FATAL

(International News Service)

PENDLETON, Ind., July 17.—Flying a home-made airplane brought death to Robert Kellsing, 19, one of the youngest Indiana flyers to hold a transport license. Kellsing was making his second flight in a small monoplane which he built himself and powered with an auto engine. The youth was unable to right his plane when it began to dive from a height of 300 feet at his private landing field near here. He had been flying about three years.

—The Louisville Courier-Journal.

An interesting bit of biting sarcasm afloat is to the effect that if the public utility isn't paying, the government ought to take it over. —The Duluth Herald.

Hopes to Sink Boston Gob

Mickey Walker (above), former middleweight champion of the world, now a tough customer to put away in the heavyweight ranks, is hopeful that his attack will sink the Boston Gob, in the person of Jack Sharkey, when the two heavies climb into the ring to swap punches at Ebbets Field, Brooklyn, N. Y., July 22.

Ball Yard Banter

The A's release Outfielder Jim Moore. And then the Chicago Cubs drop Outfielder Johnny Moore to Los Angeles. Just two Moore outfielders who wouldn't do—. Ouch!

The Giants' pennant drive seems to have been detoured onto a merry-go-round. The New Yorks continue to circle the league cities but they're not getting anywhere.

Lou Gehrig is giving the old boy freind, Babe, and Chuck-a-Luck Klein of the Phils a knock-down-drag-out bottle for the home run leadership. Our money rides with Lou. He ought to lead both at the end of hostilities as he alone is at the peak of his career.

Too late, the Pittsburgh Pirates have begun to play real ball. If they keep up the good work they'll be high enough in late September to see the pennant winner slide under the wire.

Rogers Hornsby, third baseman. That's the way the Cub lineup has been reading. But don't be too thrilled. Roge is an old hand at the bag. He toiled at that base in 83 games in 1916 and 72 in 1919 for the Cardinals. And he's been playing the sack as though it hasn't been 10 years since he last tried it.

* * *

Boston should erect a monument to Manager Shano Collins. He's convinced Red Sox fans for the first time in 13 years that baseball is still being played.

* * *

Just when some folks began to believe Coast league cities' claim that they could make big time baseball pay, the far west circuit goes and splits the season. Further proof that the Coast circuit is still a minor league the directors have voted bonuses to first, second and third place clubs, thus offering an incentive to teams to battle for second and third as well as the pennant.

Carnegie Vanquishes All Stars 13 To 10

Elephants To Play Williams

Tonight on the Clifton Flats field the South Side Elephants mushball team will meet the strong Williams at 6:30 o'clock.

The Williams only recently organized and have been playing good ball. The elephants feel confidently of defeating the Williams. The game is expected to be fast.

St. Andrews To Play Trinity

Tonight on the Gaston Park field the St. Andrews mushball team will meet the Trinity team at 6:30 o'clock. Due to the rivalry between the two teams a fast game is predicted.

SPYING ON SPORTS

BY WILLIAM RITT

By WILLIAM RITT
Central Press Sports Editor

While looking over the current crop of boy and girl wonders who have suddenly grabbed off a lot of the sport spotlight since the torrid season set in, one is suddenly reminded that there was just such a class of sensations like this last year.

But what's become of them?

Where are those names that blazed so brightly just a year ago, putting to shame and down into six-point type the older stars who are sport page perennials. The stars are still here—the Babe Ruths, Lefty Groves, Bill Tildens, Mickey Walkers, Tommy Armours, Gallant Foxes and so on. But many, many of 1930's brief sensations have vanished, many never to be heard of again.

For instance, what's become of Jim Dandy?

If memory serves this nag was a 100-to-1 shot in a race with the two prize three-year-olds of the year, Gallant Fox and Whichone. Jim Dandy won and overnight rated 72-point type in eight-column headlines.

But where's Jim Dandy now? He must be running somewhere, but he can't be beating Gallant Foxes or Whichones or it would be in the paper.

And what's become of G. Krauchi, champion middleweight of Switzerland?

Krauchi came here just a year ago fully equipped with a ferocious scowl, a fighting pose and plenty of ambition.

However, Mickey Walker, the champion, had to desert the middleweight ranks to get topnotch competition and now the Mick is fighting first-string heavies. But what's become of Krauchi?

Then there was Fred Asbeck—giant hurler who came to the New York Yankees with a fine rep, built up while tossing collegiate ball for the University of Michigan.

Fred looked big enough to lick the American league single-handed, and he may be a great star some day. But Fred either wasn't experienced enough or lacked what the Yankees need, for he's not there any more.

Bryan Grant and Ellsworth Vines were burning up the tennis courts just a year ago—but they're not on the Davis cup team, not yet, anyway.

In the case of these lads only additional experience and further test can prove whether or not they will be able to live up to their great 1930 promise.

Grant and Vines made the tennis news sizzle in late July of last year. Later Sydney Wood, now a Davis cupper, came along and stole the show.

What, by the way, has become of that London girl, Miss Bobbie West, who was going to make us forget Gertrude Ederle by her English channel feats?

And what's become of John Pettifer, the Britisher, who was hailed as a super-Carnera, a man too big to beat?

A year certainly makes a big difference, in sport, anyway.

Dogs aren't so smart, sometimes, as they're supposed to be. One bit our city treasurer instead of the assessor.—The Ann Arbor Daily News.

Airplanes are to be used fighting mosquitoes in New Jersey; but they will have to act in squadron formation. The enemy is too numerous for aces to perform solo feats.

NEW YORK STOCKS

Market Reflects Change In Foreign Markets

(International News Service)

NEW YORK, July 17.—Except for a feeble spurt at the opening, the stock market today made little or no effort to reflect the favorable turn of events in the Foreign markets. German government bonds added from 1 to 4 points to yesterday's closing rallies and the foreign exchanges were all strong in anticipation of a satisfactory termination of Germany's internal financial troubles.

The Industrials and Utilities moved up a point or so in the first period, but before the end of the hour the early gains were wiped out by profit-taking and professional selling. There were some exceptions to this rule, the Steel, Automobile and Mercantile stocks making the best showing. Chrysler led the rally in the motors and moved ahead more than a point to 23¼, and U. S. Steel was in good form around 95½, up ½. McKeesport Tin advanced 2¼ to 82 and Sears Roebuck was up 1¼ at 55. General Motors was unchanged at 37¼.

German Government new 5½s, which dipped earlier in the week below 54, sold today at 66, reflecting in a measure the improvement in general sentiment with respect to Germany's financial position. This was the most marked improvement in today's financial markets, which as a rule were dull and featureless. Cotton advanced a few points in the first hour and reacted in the second. Grain markets were firm, with narrow movements. The $25,000,000 decrease in brokers loans, as reported by the reserve board, was in line with Wall Street calculations, and therefore without special effect upon the market.

The trading pace slackened as the noon hour approached, and the security markets were once again in the position of waiting for something to happen. Call money was unchanged at 1½ per cent.

Swingin' Along

In Finance Tangle

Dr. Franz Rottenberg (above), until recently director general of the Austrian bank at Vienna, which is similar to the American Federal Reserve Bank, has been called to the Austrian Credit Bureau as its director. It will be his duty to arrange a national credit and budget system as an aid to straightening out the Austrian financial difficulties associated with the crisis in Germany.

PET GOOSE NOT A GOOSE

(International News Service)

DENVER, July 17.—Perry Sharp, Fremont, Neb., businessman, has a pet goose which chews cigars, shakes hands, goes to sleep, marks time, honks a military "Hep, Hep" and plays leap frog. While passing through Denver recently en route west, Sharp had his pet, which he calls Pal, go through his repertoire of some thirty tricks. Pal demonstrated that he was not such a "goose" after all. He crossed streets in accordance with traffic regulations, being guided by the green and red lights at the street corners. Never once did he find himself in a traffic jam.

Second Hands Getting Larger On Timepieces

World's Timepieces Are Changing Their Faces As Civilization Speeds Up

Trains And Other Things On Schedules Are Listed More Closely Now

Clocks and watches are changing their faces to keep up with a civilization that whirls onward to dizzier speeds.

The United States, land of the split second, buys more and more clocks on which the second hand has grown from a silver to a full-sized pointer as large or larger than the minute hand.

"Gaps that used to punctuate the evening radio entertainment have disappeared because programmes now are scheduled on the second," says a bulletin of the National Geographic Society from its headquarters in Washington, D. C.

"Trains listed to leave on the minute actually leave on the second. The world-wide reputation of an athlete may hang on a fraction of a second, a segment of time so small that a special timepiece, the stop watch, had to be invented to record it.

Trains on 0-0 Time

"Trains on the continent can leave at 0.0 because the continental railroad schedule for most countries is based now on 24 hours instead of 12 hours a. m. and 12 hours p. m. By international agreement, a train that arrives at midnight, arrives at 24.00, also by agreement a train that leaves a 0.0. Some clocks in railroad stations show numerals 1 to 20; others have numerals 13 to 24 within the ring 1 to 12. England has not gone over to continental railroad time.

"Hours as recorded by modern timepieces are a relatively recent invention. Martin Luther would find our clocks decidedly queer; Napoleon's instinct for order would be gratified to know that the hour had to last been standardized at 60 minutes.

"In Paris, until 1819, the hour was a variable unit of time lengthening in summer time, shortening during the winter days. It was the Paris equivalent of our daylight saving system; 6 o'clock came when dawn arrived.

Earlier Systems

"In Nurnberg and part of Central Europe, another system was used down to 1809. At the time of the equinoxes, day and night were divided into 12 hours equally; day time beginning at sundown, not noon. But as winter came on and the days grew shorter the hours alloted to day were cuf off so that, in December, night hours were numbered 1 to 16; day, 1 to 8. The reverse was true in summer. A season of the year often was referred to as the time when the day has 13 hours.

"Greenwich's master clock for the world has a dial with numbers from 1 to 24. It is exactly on longitude 0 degrees 0 minutes and 0 seconds. Here the maps of the world begin because all longitude is numbered east and west of Greenwich and all time bands are fixed with reference to the English observatory outside London. Eastern Central, Mountain and Pacific times in the United States are adjusted with reference to the Greenwich master clock, although the Naval observatory at Washington gives out the official signals through Arlington wireless station."

Billion A Year Price Of Colds

They Cost Workers An Average Of Day And A Half Of Idleness Annually

Colds cost the United States more than a billion dollars each year in the opinion of Dr. James J. King, writing in Hygeia. Statistics show that an average of one and a half days per worker are lost because of colds, making a total of 90,000,000 days or about $500,000,000. The added cost of medical care and the inefficiency following a cold will easily add up another half billion, says Dr. King.

Though the germ that causes colds has never been discovered, microscopically, doctors have learned that it is omnipresent and it sets to work in the body whenever the resistance is low. When the system is filled with poisons that are due to the lack of proper elimination from the skin, the kidneys, lungs and intestines, and to fatigue, a cold is likely to make a headway.

Plenty of rest, good food and sunshine are the best preventive measures. The sun has long been worshipped by the natives in Mexico and Peru for its beneficial effect on the body. The practice of wearing a minimum of clothing today is in harmony with this belief and the practice is a splendid one, believes Dr. King.

Sinus disease may be one of the sequels of a cold. The infection lodges in one of the sinuses, or cavities of the head—including the antrum, ethmoid, sphenoid and frontal sinuses. The most common sinus infection is in the antrum, but a more serious complication is the frontal infection, which produces severe pain above the eyes. When the pain has established its course it returns each day with such regularity that a clock may be regulated by it.

Nowadays when you hear bottles clinking on your front porch, you don't know whether it's the milkman or the bootlegger.

Romance Picked Job

Mrs. Marie Maas Meyers

Romance picked the job of air transport manager for Mrs. Marie Maas Meyers, who has been in the news recently as one of the few women holding that position in the country. When she was 16 she met Elmer T. Meyers, young flyer, and from that date her interest in aviation has been intense. Mrs. Meyers manages an air transport service at Raleigh, N. C.

Entertain Stork

The well-known bird with the dangling legs and infant swinging from its beak has paid a visit to the Los Angeles home of Shirley Mason, screen actress and sister of Viola Dana, with a bouncing baby daughter. Miss Mason is the wife of Sidney Landfield, movie director. The proud parents are shown.

Altar-Bound

Lady Sholto-Douglas, well-known member of British society, is shown with her American fiance, John Breckenridge, wealthy Californian, in London. Breckenridge is a nephew of Lady Hesketh and is several years the junior of his prospective bride. Their engagement has created much discussion in Britain.

Nobody Wants Me

The sad predicament of nobody wanting this cute little feller is enough to make any juvenile coyote break into a full-sized howl, but this chap seems almost ready to beam with an appealing smile. He was captured by a Chicagoan in the Dakotas and offered to the Lincoln Park Zoo in Chicago. Refused there, he's looking for a home. Got one?

Watch Feet, Head, Arms And Hands On Short Pitch

NUMBER 44

The short pitch to the green finds many golfers in difficulty. It shouldn't. There are certain few fundamentals to be mastered and these, if thoroughly learned and practiced, will greatly improve your game.

The two sketches above show what you must do on the backswing and coming into the ball.

Your left hand and arm do the job on the backswing. They start the club back. And, coming down into the ball, your left arm guides the club. The right arm remains close into the body.

Study the position of the club—on backswing and as it is going into the ball—in both sketches.

In the next golf note you'll read how Jimmy Johnston manages to get that deadly accuracy of his in his second shot to the pin.

Former Spy, Monk

Ignatius Tribich Lincoln (above), former member of the British Parliament and war-time spy, has been made a Buddhist monk at Peiping, China. His name is now Chao Kung and 12 circular scars on his shaven head indicate he has gone through the painful burning ceremony which is intended to prove a candidate for the Buddhist priesthood has become dead to all pain. Lincoln was arrested in New York in 1915 as a spy. He escaped but was recaptured in 1916, following which he was extradited to England.

May Be in Control

With Germany wallowing in the mire of its economic crisis and the outside world wondering if the credits required to support the tottering financial structure of the country can be granted, it is generally agreed that, should the credits be given, an American should exercise rigid control over German finances. An ideal man, it is thought, would be S. Parker Gilbert (above), agent-general for reparation payments under the Dawes plan.

Kit Carson—5. Kit's First Indian Fight

AFTER YOUNG KIT CARSON HAD JOINED THE TRAPPERS ON THEIR WAY INTO THE GILA COUNTRY HE LEARNED WITH CONSIDERABLE SURPRISE THAT HUNTING BEAVERS WAS NOT THE ONLY OBJECT OF THE EXPEDITION. THEY HAD SET OUT TO PUNISH A HOSTILE TRIBE OF INDIANS LIVING ON SALT RIVER WHO THE SEASON BEFORE HAD MURDERED A NUMBER OF WHITE HUNTERS. THE TRAPPERS MOVED WITH GREAT CAUTION AS THEY APPROACHED SALT RIVER . . . . . .

A FEW DAYS LATER KIT WAS ONE OF A PICKED PARTY THAT STOLE FORWARD JUST BEFORE DAWN TO ATTACK THE INDIAN CAMP, WHICH ONE OF THE SCOUTS HAD LOCATED IN A NARROW CANYON. KIT WAS TENSE WITH EXCITEMENT.

(Copyright, 1931, by J. Carroll Mansfield)

AT A SIGNAL THE RATTLE OF RIFLE FIRE ROUSED THE ECHOES IN THE CANYON. THEN CAME WILD YELLS AND ANSWERING SHOTS AS THE STARTLED REDSKINS EMERGED FROM THE LODGES AND DASHED FOR THEIR PONIES. THE CANYON RANG WITH THE DIN OF BATTLE.

THE SHOOTING CEASED ABRUPTLY. A FEW INDIANS LAY DEAD IN THE CANYON, WHILE THE REST OF THE BAND RACED OFF IN HEADLONG FLIGHT. THE TRAPPERS DID NOT PURSUE. THEY HAD SETTLED THE SCORE. KIT HAD BORNE HIMSELF WELL IN HIS FIRST FIGHT.

Some News, Some Views, But Mostly Just Observations Of Interesting Things Around New Castle

Seems as though that line yesterday about the gasoline prowlers who sit in cars at twelve and one o'clock in the morning and toot their horns, hit the bull's eye. Some of the folks are all for organizing a Horn Tooters Extermination League and shooting on sight or hearing.

There seems to be little excuse for the practice at that. It may be the way some of the boys have for saying good night to the lights of their lives after the young lady has gone in, but the old fashioned way of saying good night seems to be far better. At least it has the merit of being soundless. Or nearly so, depending upon the technique.

At one o'clock in the morning a horn on an automobile is practically useless. Traffic is light, pedestrians are off the streets, and even dogs are in their kennels. But it goes beyond traffic tooting. The lads in question, whoever they are, seem to get a thrill in sitting in parked cars trying for new effects in the way of horning, to the increasing discomfiture of folks who are in the hay.

They were talking about scenery, around the lunch table. One chap described the beauty of the Adirondacks, dwelling at length upon the vista from the Storm King Highway, with the Hudson River way down below. Another thought the Poconos took a ranking place in the scenery contest, and of course one lad had to drag in the grand canyon at sunset.

And then a loyal Lawrence Countian spoke up. He wanted to know, he did, if you ever saw anything prettier than the view from the Wilmington road, out about King's Chapel Church, or had you ever taken time to enjoy the scenery from the high peak of the Municipal Golf Course.

Or if you ever saw anything that hit the eye any more than the view from Weller's Hill coming in the Butler road. And then as a clincher to the argument he asked if there was anything prettier in the entire country than the views to be seen along the Slippery Rock Creek. To all of which there was little answer. Right here in Lawrence county we have views that would give a California publicity man an attack of superlatives, and if we ever did the same thing as does Monroe County, Pennsylvania, get out a county booklet of beauty spots, we'd have something to send to the folks out in Iowa.

Add another good street to the city's thoroughfares, County Line street. The concrete is about ready and it won't be long until you can drive up the street without thinking your car has a touch of the ague.

This is just to wish Bill Bigham a lot of luck in his new job with the telephone company in Pittsburgh. Unfortunately the company keeps its managers here just long enough until we get to like them and then sends a new one in.

In the past ten years there have been some good men here. John Farr, L. J. Billingsley, Deacon Dull, Tom Harper, and about the time the folks had extended them the right hand of fellowship and invited them up to the house to shoot a little bridge, they were promoted. The significant thing is that when they come to New Castle as local manager they seem ticketed for something better inside of a couple of years.

WOULD YOU BELIEVE?

Davis, chief clerk of the Pennsylvania Engineering Works lost a 12 year old bet to James McKinley, who vowed he would stay single the longest—McKinley won a box of cigars. . . . Within 20 minutes last evening crowds on the diamond saw an auto wreck, a cutting scrape, a wild chase in which a policeman nabbed and handcuffed one of the fighters, an arrest of a drunk, arrest of another on suspcion. . . .and all took place on nearly the same spot.

Pittsburgh Is Hit By Slight Tornado

Floral Shop Is Damaged To Extent Of $25,000 Thursday

(International News Service)

PITTSBURGH, July 17.—Residents of the West View and Perrysville districts today began the task of repairing extensive damage resulting from the miniature tornado which wrecked several buildings, uprooted trees and blew down telephone wires as it blustered through that region.

The Blind Floral company reported a loss of $25,000 incurred through the destruction of a large hot house filled with growing chrysanthemums. The entire front window structure was blown off the Perrysville school and the building was later flooded from cellar to roof in the rainstorm which followed.

Trees and branches were strewn about the streets of the two boroughs. Power and telephone linemen worked until a late hour last night restoring service.

SURPRISE PARTY

Mrs. Mike Banko was pleasingly surprised when a number of her friends gathered at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Lazar of Ninth street Sunday evening.

Miss Anna Hitchcock, of Harrisburg, who had been district supervisor of nurses for the State Health department, in charge of 30 counties west of here, was summoned here from Pittsburgh and dismissed. Her successor has not been named.

Youths Hold-Up Barbecue Stands

Two Stands On Clairton Road Are Held Up; Small Amount Of Loot Taken

(International News Service)

PITTSBURGH, July 17.—Two youthful, flashily-dressed bandits today held up two barbecue stands and escaped with a small amount of loot after firing a reckless and wanton shot at the proprietor of one of the stands.

The robbers first appeared at the Winter Garden barbecue on Clairton road and forced Bob Douglas, manager, to hand over $6 from the cash register.

They next appeared at the Locust Inn, also on Clairton road, and escaped with a small amount of cash. As they left, one of the bandits turned and fired a shot at the proprietor.

The joy to be found in the simple life depends altogether on whether it's your whim or Fate's whim.

Boxers Hope To Capture Honors

They're Getting In Shape For Coming Fistic Clashes Here

UBALDO HOPES TO SECURE BOUT SOON

In every city in the country there is always some chap of a pugilistic nature who falls into the good graces of fandom and when Monday night arrives there'll be a galaxy of local fistic knights who will swing gloves in hope of having their praises sung and of some day occupying a promient place in the world of punch.

Years ago George Chip meandered into town with a squatty frame and good intentions. He had a stout heart and a desire to do as instructed and before he had hung up the gloves forever he had won the middleweight championship of the world. His fame was sung worldwide.

Chip was the only chap to have won and lost a title while a resident of the city but other boys who made good in the game were Tony Ross, Tom McMahon, Dan Dailey, Joe Chip, Battling Terry, Tommy Jones, Babe Picato, Patsy Brannigan, Carl Cavelli and Emmett Rocco of Ellwood City is now occupying the limelight.

Gibson Versus Barry.

Mickey Solomon is making another bid for fistic honors and since his attempted comeback has been doing good. Boys who are trying to get to the position that some of these boys held have been battling as preliminary boxers and have pleased fans with their display of punch.

A few weeks ago seven four round bouts were staged and practically every one of the tilts was good. Fans left the Castle Bowl singing the praise of the battlers and expressed the desire that another carnival of seven contests be staged and it will be promoted Monday night.

Merle Gibson will take on Baby Barry of Kittanning. Barry is a stranger here. They are middleweights. Bill Donnelli will meet Joe Levoskey of Kittanning. They will weigh 153 pounds. Jackie Ruffner, Kittanning, will meet Billy Mido of New Castle, at 120 pounds.

Kid Wright and Billy Frengel, 143 pounders of New Castle will let 'em fly. In another bout Joe Boldin, Cleveland, and Joe Di Muccio, this city, will clash and in the last four rounder on the calendar, Marshall Counette of Cleveland and Ay Taylor of Lorrain, O., will step forth.

Emmett Rocco is in training for his bout with Huffy Griffiths at Pittsburgh. He is using Mickey Solomon and Morrie Suber of New Castle as training mates. Rocco hopes to trot along with Griffith then cast punches with Charlie Retzlaff who also hails from Chicago. Retzlaff is a right smart battler.

Primo Ubaldo, in an interview with Jimmy Doyle of the Cleveland Plain Dealer uttered a loud complaint. He claimed that some of the boys were ducking him. He is a native of Rome, Italy, and has been going fairly good since he arrived, as Doyle put it in the United States.

Johnny Banko will soon be seen in action, it is believed. Banko underwent an operation for appendicitis and Bob Latera is using good judgment in not rushing him back into the ring. Banko is one of the best punchers the city preliminary ranks has.

Frankie Frey is somewhat peeved because he did not get a return whack at Merle Gibson. Merle, it will be recalled is the chap who closed Frey's eye then peppered him for a decision in their four round bout. No doubt Frey will get a chance to meet the winner of the Gibson-Barry bout.

Even fighters must have a vacation. Homer Gray is said to be in the vicinity of Cambridge Springs. Homer was anxious to get lots of fights and when he was paged it was discovered he had gone for a vacation. When he returns he will find Joe Levoskey or Bill Donnelli ready for action.

Frankie Steimack would have made a good opponent for Jimmy Scott of Bridgeport but Frankie didn't care to accept the date and Scott, being too good, for the other 135 pounders here he couldn't be scheduled. The same applied to Jim Velinich, heavyweight, who stands out above all the others local heavyweights.

It looks very much as though a stomach ailment will probably keep Romeo Pacelli out of the ring for some time. He had been matched with Al Taylor but after a few days training Pacelli had to ask that he be removed from the card. Marshall Couette was put in Romeo's place.

Reports from Cleveland state that Frankie Rio, once a favorite here, would like to re-enter the game. Frankie fought recently at Cleveland and suffered a knockout. Frankie put up some good fights here, especially in his encounters with Billy Wallace of Youngstown who has become a past performer.

Fans recalled a few days that one of the best fights ever staged at the Bowl was fought by Wildcat Auskings and Louie Severio and also by Al Reno and Severio. Severio won twice from Reno. Of them all it is believed that Auskings was as husky a junior lightweight as trod the ring locally.

Trick Golfer To Give Exhibition At Field Club

Jack Redmond, Secured By Field Club For Exhibition Match And Entertainment

IS KNOWN OVER ENTIRE COUNTRY

The New Castle Field club is sponsoring a personal appearance by Jack Redmond, famous international golf trick shot artist at the Field Club course next Thursday. Announcement of the coming of Redmond was made by James B. Mathews today.

The exhibition golf match and entertainment by the man who makes the golf club almost talk, will be open to the public. Redmond has appeared in all the large cities of the country from coast to coast and from Goose Point Florida to Winnepeg Canada. He has also shown before large crowds in Belgium, France, England, Holland, Ireland, Germany, Scotland, Mexico and Switzerland. He is the traveling ambassodor of the golfing world.

In addition to his exhibition of the most difficult of golf shots, Redmond will engage in a foursome match of 18 holes with probably George Trainor, M. K. Gilliland, and Captain V. Arthur Smith. It is not positive yet just who will play Redmond, but it will likely be the above mentioned.

Redmond has met and been matched against some of the greatest stars in the game today, such as Walter Hagen, Horton Smith, Leo Diegel, Johnny Farrell, Arthur Havers, Dr. O. F. Willing, and others too numerous to mention, and Redmond can hold his own with any of the big stars, but stays out of open championship play because of his love for trick shots. He is ranked with Joe Kirkwood in the art of making the golf ball do various stunts. He is also an authority on the golf game and given recognition by the leading golf publications of the country. He is now touring the Eastern section of the country and the Field Club is fortunate in securing him.

Titan Athletic Officials Spend Varied Vacations

(Special To The News)

NEW WILMINGTON, Pa., July 17—What do college athletic coaches and officials do during the summer? That question can be answered with regard to Westminster college mentors by saying that the vacation period, so-called, sees the men in varied activities.

John D. Lawther, director of athletic and coach of football and basketball, spent the latter part of June moving from Freeport, L. I. to New Wilmington to take up again his duties at the Titan helm. Lawther is assisting college officials in student canvass activities until the opening of the football training camp on September 1.

Graduate Manager A. A. MacDonald is spending the whole summer, as usual, in student canvass-work. Part of the time he is in the college office here, and part of the time he is on the road interviewing student prospects.

Jack Hulme, gymnasium director and team trainer, has been busy conducting kiiddie days at a number of amusement parks, and is getting ready to take charge of New Wilmington's municipal swimming pool which will be opened this month.

R. X. Graham, track coach, is spending his fifth summer at the University of Wisconsin where he is writing his thesis and taking his oral examinations for the master's degree. Graham is also columnist and feature writer on the staff of the Daily Cardinal.

The entire sports staff of the United Presbyterian school will be together in New Wilmington from August 15 on. A number of matters of importance will be thrashed out with the athletic council, which meets monthly, and plans for the football season will be made.

Heavyweight Contender Scores 29th Knockout; Steve Hamas Also Wins

By LES CONKLIN
International News Service Sports Writer

NEW YORK, July 17.—Two rising young heavyweight stars gleamed with renewed brilliance in the fistic firmament today.

Charlesy Retzlaff and Steve Hamas, these will be names to conjure with in the heavyweight division during the next few years. Both looked the part of coming champions last night by easily disposing of their opponents at the Queensboro stadium in Brooklyn.

Retzlaff, the Minnesota knockout king who already has been picked as a future wearer of the purple robes by Max Schmeling, made an impressive eastern debut by scoring a technical knockout over Ralph Ficucello, sturdy Brooklyn Italian and former national amateur champion, in the second round of their scheduled ten-rounder. It was the gangling farmer boy's 29th knockout in 33 starts.

Hamas also won by a technical knockout. The victim of the former Penn State athletic star was Ted Sandwina, German-American heavyweight, who took a terrific shellacking before the referee stopped the one-sided affair in the third round.

"Muny" Course Is Inspected By Committee

Original Construction Committee And Operating Committee Play Course

DISCUSS PLANS FOR IMPROVEMENTS

Members of the original construction committee, together with the present operating committee, played the Municipal Course Thursday afternoon, in order to determine the condition of the course and acquaint themselves better with the things that are needed to make the course still better.

Those in the group were Howard B. Richards, L. B. Round and Dan Woolcock, members of the operating committee; and W. J. Offutt, James M. Smith Sr., Robert J. Tully and H. L. Gordon, who were members of the original construction committee.

They found the course in splendid condition, but found several places where improvements can be made to better the condition of the course and make it more popular with the public.

Hundreds of new golfers are frequenting the course this year, the committee found, and most of those who were members last year are again enrolled.

A great many things have been done to improve the course this year and as fast as money becomes available from the receipts of the course, it will be put back in additional improvements, members of the operating committees state.

Through economies in operation and in purchasing needed equipment and supplies many things have been done this year which could not have otherwise been accomplished.

A great amount of drain tile was put in place to keep the water off the low places, and additional tile will be put in late this fall and early next spring. Besides that, the entrance to the course was beautified; additional fairway seeded and improved; the rough along the different holes was reduced, a fence erected about the septic tanks on hole 15 and other improvements made.

Within a few more years, the course will be made one of the finest municipal courses in the state, and one which the citizens of New Castle can well be proud of.

Chicago Cubs Topple Giants

St. Louis Cardinals Blank Brooklyn, 5-0; Athletics Win, 5-3

INDIANS NOSE OUT YANKS, 9-8

By COPELAND C. BURG
International News Service Sports Writer

NEW YORK, July 17.—Rogers Hornsby may have an ingrowing heel and the same kind of a disposition but the position of the Chicago Cubs today in the National League fight indicates there's nothing much the matter with his head.

The Cubs whacked the New York Giants on the chin again yesterday, 5 to 2, and moved into second place, six games to the rear of St. Louis, with Mr. Hornsby still playing third and Jurges at second.

Hallahan was as mysterious as a veiled woman to the Brooklyn Robins and when his teammates, Watkins and Hafey hit homers the result turned out St. Louis 5, Brooklyn 0. Phelps, the Brooklyn gent often described as a great hurler, was not that good, allowing five hits in the six innings he graced the scene.

Roy Mahaffey gave the Detroit Tigers 10 hits but he hit a homer and Philadelphia took another, 5 to 3.

Heavy hitting by West that climaxed in a ninth inning rally won for Washington, 5 to 4 over the Chicago White Sox.

Comorosky, batting for Jensen smashed a homer with one on as the Pirates garnered their fourth straight triumph over the Phillies, 12 to 8.

Boston got eight hits off Gray against five safeties by St. Louis off Lisenbee and Moore but the Brownies took it, 2 to 1.

Bruce Cunningham shut out the Cincy Reds for Boston, 2 to 0, being hit safely only five times.

Babe Ruth hit a homer and so did Lou Gehrig and even Pitcher Ruffing, but 11 bases on balls by Mr. Ruffing and a couple of his boy friends, who succeeded him, proved too generous and the Cleveland Indians humbled the Yankees, 9 to 8.

China Puts End To Slave-Girl System

(International News Service)

NANKING, July 17.—The Central government has ordered an end to the system of slave girls. These unfortunates are usually sold by parents who are in dire financial straits.

Owners are now commanded to return the victims to their parents, or when that is not possible, to permit the slaves to select their own husbands when they reach a marriageable age.

Along the same line, the government has issued an interdiction against the old custom of taking future daughter-in-law into the home when they are still little girls and there forcing them to do the drugery under cruel treatment from mothers-in-law.

HOME-MADE PLANE FATAL

(International News Service)

PENDLETON, Ind., July 17.—Flying a home-made airplane brought death to Robert Kellsing, 19, one of the youngest Indiana flyers to hold a transport license. Kellsing was making his second flight in a small monoplane which he built himself and powered with an auto engine. The youth was unable to right his plane when it began to dive from a height of 300 feet at his private landing field near here. He had been flying about three years.

—The Louisville Courier-Journal.

An interesting bit of biting sarcasm afloat is to the effect that if the public utility isn't paying, the government ought to take it over. —The Duluth Herald.

Hopes to Sink Boston Gob

Mickey Walker (above), former middleweight champion of the world, now a tough customer to put away in the heavyweight ranks, is hopeful that his attack will sink the Boston Gob, in the person of Jack Sharkey, when the two heavies climb into the ring to swap punches at Ebbets Field, Brooklyn, N. Y., July 22.

Ball Yard Banter

The A's release Outfielder Jim Moore. And then the Chicago Cubs drop Outfielder Johnny Moore to Los Angeles. Just two Moore outfielders who wouldn't do—. Ouch!

The Giants' pennant drive seems to have been detoured onto a merry-go-round. The New Yorks continue to circle the league cities but they're not getting anywhere.

Lou Gehrig is giving the old boy freind, Babe, and Chuck-a-Luck Klein of the Phils a knock-down-drag-out bottle for the home run leadership. Our money rides with Lou. He ought to lead both at the end of hostilities as he alone is at the peak of his career.

Too late, the Pittsburgh Pirates have begun to play real ball. If they keep up the good work they'll be high enough in late September to see the pennant winner slide under the wire.

Rogers Hornsby, third baseman. That's the way the Cub lineup has been reading. But don't be too thrilled. Roge is an old hand at the bag. He toiled at that base in 83 games in 1916 and 72 in 1919 for the Cardinals. And he's been playing the sack as though it hasn't been 10 years since he last tried it.

• • •

Boston should erect a monument to Manager Shano Collins. He's convinced Red Sox fans for the first time in 13 years that baseball is still being played.

• • •

Just when some folks began to believe Coast league cities' claim that they could make big time baseball pay, the far west circuit goes and splits the season. Further proof that the Coast circuit is still a minor league the directors have voted bonuses to first, second and third place clubs, thus offering an incentive to teams to battle for second and third as well as the pennant.

SPYING ON SPORTS

By WILLIAM RITT

By WILLIAM RITT
Central Press Sports Editor

While looking over the current crop of boy and girl wonders who have suddenly grabbed off a lot of the sport spotlight since the torrid season set in, one is suddenly reminded that there was just such a class of sensations like this last year.

But what's become of them?

Where are those names that blazed so brightly just a year ago, putting to shame and down into six-point type the older stars who are sport page perennials. The stars are still here—the Babe Ruths, Lefty Groves, Bill Tildens, Mickey Walkers, Tommy Armours, Gallant Foxes and so on. But many, many of 1930's brief sensations have vanished, many never to be heard of again.

For instance, what's become of Jim Dandy?

If memory serves this nag was a 100-to-1 shot in a race with the two prize three-year-olds of the year, Gallant Fox and Whichone. Jim Dandy won and overnight rated 72-point type in eight-column headlines.

But where's Jim Dandy now? He must be running somewhere, but he can't be beating Gallant Foxes or Whichones or it would be in the paper.

And what's become of G. Krauchi, champion middleweight of Switzerland?

Krauchi came here just a year ago fully equipped with a ferocious scowl, a fighting pose and plenty of ambition.

However, Mickey Walker, the champion, had to desert the middleweight ranks to get topnotch competition and now the Mick is fighting first-string heavies. But what's become of Krauchi?

Then there was Fred Asbeck—giant hurler who came to the New York Yankees with a fine rep, built up while tossing collegiate ball for the University of Michigan.

Fred looked big enough to lick the American league single-handed, and he may be a great star some day. But Fred either wasn't experienced enough or lacked what the Yankees need, for he's not there any more.

Bryan Grant and Ellsworth Vines were burning up the tennis courts just a year ago—but they're not on the Davis cup team, not yet, anyway.

In the case of these lads only additional experience and further test can prove whether or not they will be able to live up to their great 1930 promise.

Grant and Vines made the tennis news sizzle in late July of last year. Later Sydney Wood, now a Davis cupper, came along and stole the show.

What, by the way, has become of that London girl, Miss Bobbie West, who was going to make us forget Gertrude Ederle by her English channel feats?

And what's become of John Pettifer, the Britisher, who was hailed as a super-Carnera, a man too big to beat?

What's become of them?

A year certainly makes a big difference, in sport, anyway.

Dogs aren't so smart, sometimes, as they're supposed to be. One bit our city treasurer instead of the assessor—The Ann Arbor Daily News.

Airplanes are to be used fighting mosquitoes in New Jersey; but they will have to act in squadron formation. The enemy is too numerous for aces to perform solo feats.

NEW YORK STOCKS

Market Reflects Change In Foreign Markets

(International News Service)

NEW YORK, July 17.—Except for a feeble spurt at the opening, the stock market today made little or no effort to reflect the favorable turn of events in the Foreign markets. German government bonds added from 1 to 4 points to yesterday's closing rallies and the foreign exchanges were all strong in anticipation of a satisfactory termination of Germany's internal financial troubles.

The Industrials and Utilities moved up a point or so in the first period, but before the end of the hour the early gains were wiped out by profit-taking and professional selling. There were some exceptions to this rule, the Steel, Automobile and Mercantile stocks making the best showing. Chrysler led the rally in the motors and moved ahead more than a point to 23¾, and U. S. Steel was in good form around 95½, up ¼. McKeesport Tin advanced 12¾ to 82 and Sears Roebuck was up 1¼ at 55. General Motors was unchanged at 37½.

German Government new 5½s, which dipped earlier in the week below 54, sold today at 66, reflecting in a measure the improvement in general sentiment with respect to Germany's financial position. This was the most marked improvement in today's financial markets, which as a rule were dull and featureless. Cotton advanced a few points in the first hour and reacted in the second. Grain markets were firm, with narrow movements. The $25,000,000 decrease in brokers loans, as reported by the reserve board, was in line with Wall Street calculations, and therefore without special effect upon the market.

The trading pace slackened as the noon hour approached, and the security markets were once again in the position of waiting for something to happen. Call money was unchanged at 1½ per cent.

Swingin' Along

Swinging along to the time beaten by the waves as they roll up on the ultra-fashionable Southampton, L. I., bathing beach, Mrs. Edward S. Voss, of Old Westbury, L. I., makes this strikingly pretty picture. Note the sharp contrast between striped jersey and black, flowing trousers. It's a "hot" looking outfit for these warm days.

In Finance Tangle

Dr. Franz Rottenberg (above), until recently director general of the Austrian bank at Vienna, which is similar to the American Federal Reserve Bank, has been called to the Austrian Credit Bureau as its director. It will be his duty to arrange a national credit and budget system as an aid to straightening out the Austrian financial difficulties associated with the crisis in Germany.

PET GOOSE NOT A GOOSE

(International News Service)

DENVER, July 17.—Perry Sharp, Fremont, Neb., businessman, has a pet goose which chews cigars, shakes hands, goes to sleep, marks time, honks a military "Hep, Hep" and plays leap frog. While passing through Denver recently en route west, Sharp had his pet, which he calls Pal, go through his repertoire of some thirty tricks. Pal demonstrated that he was not such a "goose" after all. He crossed streets in accordance with traffic regulations, being guided by the green and red lights at the street corners. Never once did he find himself in a traffic jam.

Second Hands Getting Larger On Timepieces

World's Timepieces Are Changing Their Faces As Civilization Speeds Up

Trains And Other Things On Schedules Are Listed More Closely Now

Clocks and watches are changing their faces to keep up with a civilization that whirls onward to dizzier speeds.

The United States, land of the split second, buys more and more clocks on which the second hand has grown from a silver to a full-sized pointer as large or larger than the minute hand.

"Gaps that used to punctuate the evening radio entertainment have disappeared because programmes now are scheduled on the second," says a bulletin of the National Geographic Society from its headquarters in Washington, D. C.

"Trains listed to leave on the minute actually leave on the second. The world-wide reputation of an athlete may hang on a fraction of a second, a segment of time so small that a special timepiece, the stop watch, had to be invented to record it.

"But with one European refinement of time and clocks, American does not conform.

Trains on 0-0 Time

"Trains on the continent can leave at 0.0 because the continental railroad schedule for most countries is based now on 24 hours instead of 12 hours a. m. and 12 hours p. m. By international agreement, a train that arrives at midnight, arrives at 24.00, also by agreement a train that leaves a 0.0. Some clocks in railroad stations show numerals 1 to 20; others have numerals 13 to 24 within the ring 1 to 12. England has not gone over to continental railroad time.

"Hours as recorded by modern timepieces are a relatively recent invention. Martin Luther would find our clocks decidedly queer; Napoleon's instinct for order would be gratified to know that the hour had to last been standardized at 60 minutes.

"In Paris, until 1819, the hour was a variable unit of time lengthening in summer time, shortening during the winter days. It was the Paris equivalent of our daylight saving system; 6 o'clock came when dawn arrived.

Earlier Systems

"In Nurnberg and part of Central Europe, another system was used down to 1809. At the time of the equinoxes, day and night were divided into 12 hours equally; day time beginning at sundown, not noon. But as winter came on and the days grew shorter the hours alloted to day were cut off so that, in December, night hours were numbered 1 to 16; day, 1 to 8. The reverse was true in summer. A season of the year often was referred to as the time when the day has 13 hours.

"Greenwich's master clock for the world has a dial with numbers from 1 to 24. It is exactly on longitude 0 degrees 0 minutes and 0 seconds. Here the maps of the world begin because all longitude is numbered east and west of Greenwich and all time bands are fixed with reference to the English observatory outside London. Eastern Central, Mountain and Pacific times in the United States are adjusted with reference to the Greenwich master clock, although the Naval observatory at Washington gives out the official signals through Arlington wireless station."

Billion A Year Price Of Colds

They Cost Workers An Average Of Day And A Half Of Idleness Annually

Colds cost the United States more than a billion dollars each year in the opinion of Dr. James J. King, writing in Hygeia. Statistics show that an average of one and a half days per worker are lost because of colds, making a total of 90,000,000 days or about $500,000,000. The added cost of medical care and the inefficiency following a cold will easily add up another half billion, says Dr. King.

Though the germ that causes colds has never been discovered, microscopically, doctors have learned that it is omnipresent and it sets to work in the body whenever the resistance is low. When the system is filled with poisons that are due to the lack of proper elimination from the skin, the kidneys, lungs and intestines, and to fatigue, a cold is likely to make a headway.

Plenty of rest, good food and sunshine are the best preventive measures. The sun has long been worshipped by the natives in Mexico and Peru for its beneficial effect on the body. The practice of wearing a minimum of clothing today is in harmony with this belief and the practice is a splendid one, believes Dr. King.

Sinus disease may be one of the sequels of a cold. The infection lodges in one of the sinuses, or cavities of the head—including the antrum, ethmoid, sphenoid and frontal sinuses. The most common sinus infection is in the antrum, but a more serious complication is the frontal infection, which produces severe pain above the eyes. When the pain has established its course it returns each day with such regularity that a clock may be regulated by it.

Nowadays when you hear bottles clinking on your front porch, you don't know whether it's the milkman or the bootlegger.

Romance Picked Job

Mrs. Marie Maas Meyers

Romance picked the job of air transport manager for Mrs. Marie Maas Meyers, who has been in the news recently as one of the few women holding that position in the country. When she was 16 she met Elmer T. Meyers, young flyer, and from that date her interest in aviation has been intense. Mrs. Meyers manages an air transport service at Raleigh, N. C.

Entertain Stork

The well-known bird with the dangling legs and infant swinging from its beak has paid a visit to the Los Angeles home of Shirley Mason, screen actress and sister of Viola Dana, with a bouncing baby daughter. Miss Mason is the wife of Sidney Landfield, movie director. The proud parents are shown.

Altar-Bound

Lady Sholto-Douglas, well-known member of British society, is shown with her American fiance, John Breckenridge, wealthy Californian, in London. Breckenridge is a nephew of Lady Hesketh and is several years the junior of his prospective bride. Their engagement has created much discussion in Britain.

Nobody Wants Me

The sad predicament of nobody wanting this cute little feller is enough to make any juvenile coyote break into a full-sized howl, but this chap seems almost ready to beam with an appealing smile. He was captured by a Chicagoan in the Dakotas and offered to the Lincoln Park Zoo in Chicago. Refused there, he's looking for a home. Got one?

Watch Feet, Head, Arms And Hands On Short Pitch

By ROY GROVE
Central Press Golf Writer

Copyright, 1931, Central Press

NUMBER 44

The short pitch to the green finds many golfers in difficulty. It shouldn't. There are certain few fundamentals to be mastered and these, if thoroughly learned and practiced, will greatly improve your game.

The two sketches above show what you must do on the backswing and coming into the ball.

First of all, keep your head and feet stationary—as shown in the drawings.

Your left hand and arm do the job on the backswing. They start the club back. And, coming down into the ball, your left arm guides the club. The right arm remains close into the body.

Study the position of the club—on backswing and as it is going into the ball—in both sketches.

NEXT—JIMMY JOHNSTON.

REV. WHETSELL AT CITY MISSION

Rev. Charles Whetsell, pastor of the First Nazarene church, will be in charge of the services at the City Mission on South Mercer street this evening. He will be accompanied by a group of young people from his church and special music will feature the service.

Correct this sentence: "Now if we're brutal enough," said the official, "we can change these criminals into law-abiding citizens."

SALLY'S SALLIES

It is impossible to tell a brunette that all is fair in love.

Former Spy, Monk

Ignatius Tribich Lincoln (above), former member of the British Parliament and war-time spy, has been made a Buddhist monk at Peiping, China. His name is now Chao Kung and 12 circular scars on his shaven head indicate he has gone through the painful burning ceremony which is intended to prove a candidate for the Buddhist priesthood has become dead to all pain. Lincoln was arrested in New York in 1915 as a spy. He escaped but was recaptured in 1916, following which he was extradited to England.

May Be in Control

With Germany wallowing in the mire of its economic crisis and the outside world wondering if the credits required to support the tottering financial structure of the country can be granted, it is generally agreed that, should the credits be given, an American should exercise rigid control over German finances. An ideal man, it is thought, would be S. Parker Gilbert (above), agent-general for reparation payments under the Dawes plan.

Some News, Some Views, But Mostly Just Observations Of Interesting Things Around New Castle

Seems as though that line yesterday about the gasoline prowlers who sit in cars at twelve and one o'clock in the morning and toot their horns, hit the bull's eye. Some of the folks are all for organizing a Horn Tooters Extermination League and shooting on sight or hearing.

There seems to be little excuse for the practice at that. It may be the way some of the boys have for saying good night to the lights of their lives after the young lady has gone in, but the old fashioned way of saying good night seems to be far better. At least it has the merit of being soundless. Or nearly so, depending upon the technique.

At one o'clock in the morning a horn on an automobile is practically useless. Traffic is light, pedestrians are off the streets, and even dogs are in their kennels. But it goes beyond traffic tooting. The lads in question, whoever they are, seem to get a thrill in sitting in parked cars trying for new effects in the way of horning, to the increasing discomfiture of folks who are in the hay.

They were talking about scenery, around the lunch table. One chap described the beauty of the Adirondacks, dwelling at length upon the vista from the Storm King Highway, with the Hudson River way down below. Another thought the Poconos took a ranking place in the scenery contest, and of course one lad had to drag in the grand canyon at sunset.

And then a loyal Lawrence Countian spoke up. He wanted to know, he did, if you ever saw anything prettier than the view from the Wilmington road, out about King's Chapel Church, or had you ever taken time to enjoy the scenery from the high peak of the Municipal Golf Course.

Or if you ever saw anything that hit the eye any more than the view from Weller's Hill coming in the Butler road. And then as a clincher to the argument he asked if there was anything prettier in the entire country than the views to be seen along the Slippery Rock Creek. To all of which there was little answer. Right here in Lawrence county we have views that would give a California publicity man an attack of superlatives, and if we ever did the same thing as does Monroe County, Pennsylvania, get out a county booklet of beauty spots, we'd have something to send to the folks out in Iowa.

Add another good street to the city's thoroughfares, County Line street. The concrete is about ready and it won't be long until you can drive up the street without thinking your car has a touch of the ague.

This is just to wish Bill Bigham a lot of luck in his new job with the telephone company in Pittsburgh. Unfortunately the company keeps its managers here just long enough until we get to like them and then sends a new one in.

In the past ten years there have been some good men here. John Farr, L. J. Billingsley, Deacon Dull, Tom Harper, and about the time the folks had extended them the right hand of fellowship and invited them up to the house to shoot a little bridge, they were promoted. The significant thing is that when they come to New Castle as local manager they seem ticketed for something better inside of a couple of years.

WOULD YOU BELIEVE?

By getting married Alex L. Davis, chief clerk of the Pennsylvania Engineering Works lost a 12 year old bet to James McKinley, who vowed he would stay single the longest—McKinley won a box of cigars. . . . Within 20 minutes last evening crowds on the diamond saw an auto wreck, a cutting scrape, a wild chase in which a policeman nabbed and handcuffed one of the fighters, an arrest of a drunk, arrest of another on suspcion. . . and all took place on nearly the same spot.

Roger Meemans will follow in the footsteps of his father. . . He starts at the "Y" school in Chicago in September to learn all about general secretarial work with the associations. . . Business and Professional Women's representatives of this city apparently failed to escape the heat when they left here recently to attend the convention of the B. P. W. in Richmond, V. . . One of the highlights of the gatherings in the southern city, a gesture of the women to the cotton state, was the wearing of cotton dresses at a ball.

A coal black, full blooded Egyptian was arrested on the diamond yesterday on suspicion in connection with the cutting scrape that attracted scores. . He could not speak English and policeman were somewhat confused. . Whereupon Habib "Happy" Hage, local tailor, startled the crowd by entering in conversation with the stranger. . At the police headquarters the dark one was docketed as E. Watson! . . Some who know the Egyptian say he worked as a cook in the French navy. . . .

Most of the benches on the public square were occupied last evening at eleven o'clock. . . The lighting system and the arrangements of the flood lights on the square at the present time is such that reading a newspaper is easy at any part of the square at night. . . .

Pittsburgh Is Hit By Slight Tornado

Floral Shop Is Damaged To Extent Of $25,000 Thursday

(International News Service)

PITTSBURGH, July 17.—Residents of the West View and Perrysville districts today began the task of repairing extensive damage resulting from the miniature tornado which wrecked several buildings, uprooted trees and blew down telephone wires as it blustered through that region.

The Blind Floral company reported a loss of $25,000 incurred through the destruction of a large hot house filled with growing chrysanthemums. The entire front window structure was blown off the Perrysville school and the building was later flooded from cellar to roof in the rainstorm which followed.

Trees and branches were strewn about the streets of the two boroughs. Power and telephone linemen worked until a late hour last night restoring service.

Youths Hold-Up Barbecue Stands

(International News Service)

PITTSBURGH, July 17.—Two youthful, flashily-dressed bandits today held up two barbecue stands and escaped with a small amount of loot after firing a reckless and wanton shot at the proprietor of one of the stands.

The robbers first appeared at the Winter Garden barbecue on Clairton road and forced Bob Douglas, manager, to hand over $6 from the cash register.

They next appeared at the Locust Inn, also on Clairton road, and escaped with a small amount of cash. As they left, one of the bandits turned and fired a shot at the proprietor.

Police radio cars were ordered out to hunt for the automobile in which the robbers were riding.

The joy to be found in the simple life depends altogether on whether it's your whim or Fate's whim.
